

From the Library of Professor Samuel Miller in Memory of Judge Samuel Miller Breckinridge Presented by Samuel Miller Breckinridge Long to the Library of Princeton Theological Seminary

500 1700
v. 1

DISCOURSES AND DISSERTATIONS
ON THE SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINES
OF
ATONEMENT & SACRIFICE.

DISCOURSES AND DISSERTATIONS

ON THE

SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINES

OF Sam: Miller.

ATONEMENT & SACRIFICE:

AND

ON THE PRINCIPAL ARGUMENTS ADVANCED, AND THE MODE OF REASONING EMPLOYED, BY THE OPONENTS OF THOSE DOCTRINES

AS HELD BY THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH:

WITH

AN APPENDIX,

CONTAINING

SOME STRICTURES ON MR. BELSHAM'S ACCOUNT OF THE UNITARIAN SCHEME,

IN HIS REVIEW OF MR. WILBERFORCE'S TREATISE.

✓ BY

WILLIAM MAGEE, D. D.

SENIOR FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, AND PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS, IN THE UNIVERSITY OF DUBLIN.

THE THIRD EDITION, WITH ADDITIONS.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

Printed by J. & E. Hodson, Cross Street, Hatton Garden, FOR T. CADELL AND W. DAVIES, IN THE STRAND.

1812.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

WILLIAM CONYNGHAM PLUNKET.

IN placing at the head of these sheets, a name, to which the respect and the admiration of the Public have attached so much celebrity; and in avowing, at the same time, that I have selected the name of a Friend, with whom I have been united, almost from childhood, in the closest habits of intimacy; I am aware, that I subject myself to the imputation of acting as much from a motive of pride, as from a sentiment of affection. I admit the imputation to be well-founded. To enjoy the happiness of such a Friend, and not to exult in the possession, would be not to deserve it. It is a pride, which, I trust, may be indulged in without blame: and the distinction of having been associated with a character, so transcendently eminent for private worth, for public virtue, and for intellectual endowments, I shall always regard as one of the most honourable circumstances of my life.

But, independently of these considerations, the very nature of my subject supplies a reason for the choice which I have made. For I know not, in truth, to whom I could, with greater propriety, inscribe a work, whose chief end is to expose false reasoning and to maintain true religion, than to one, in whom the powers of just reasoning are so conspicuously displayed, and by whom the great principles of religion are so sincerely revered.

With these views, I trust, that I shall stand excused by you, my dear Sir, in having, without your knowledge, thus availed myself of the credit of your name. The following treatise, in which so many additions have been made to a former publication, as in some measure to entitle it to the appellation of a new work, I submit to your judgment: well satisfied, that if it meet your approbation, it will not find an unfavourable reception from the public.

I am, my dear Sir,

With the truest attachment,

Your affectionate Friend and Servant,

THE AUTHOR.

Trinity College, Dublin,

Sept. 21, 1809.

CONTENTS.

VOL. I.

| | |
|---|---------|
| PREFATORY ADDRESS to the Students in Divinity, in the University of Dublin | p. xiii |
| ADVERTISEMENT to the Second Edition | xxiii |
| ADVERTISEMENT to the Third Edition | xxv |
| DISCOURSE I.—On the scriptural doctrine of ATONEMENT | 1 |
| DISCOURSE II.—On the scriptural doctrine of SACRIFICE | 41 |

ILLUSTRATIONS and EXPLANATORY DISSERTATIONS.

| | |
|--|-----|
| No. I.—On the PRE-EXISTENCE OF CHRIST, and the species of arguments by which this article of the Christian Doctrine has been opposed | 69 |
| No. II.—Unitarian objections to the religious observance of stated days | 88 |
| No. III.—On the importance of the doctrine of REDEMPTION | 90 |
| No. IV.—Pardon not necessarily consequent upon Repentance | 93 |
| No. V.—The sense entertained by mankind of the natural inefficacy of Repentance, proved from the history of HUMAN SACRIFICES | 96 |
| No. VI.—On the multiplied operation of the Divine acts | 129 |
| No. VII.—Deistical reasoning instanced in CHUBB ... | 130 |
| No. VIII.—On the consistency of Prayer with the divine immutability | 136 |

CONTENTS.

VOL. I.

| | |
|--|-----|
| No. IX.—On the granting of the divine forgiveness through a Mediator or Intercessor | 140 |
| No. X.—On UNITARIANS, or Rational Dissenters .. | 148 |
| No. XI.—On the distinction between UNITARIANS and SOCINIANS | 150 |
| No. XII.—On the corruption of man's natural state .. | 154 |
| No. XIII.—On the misrepresentation of the doctrine of Atonement by Unitarians | 171 |
| No. XIV.—On the disrespect of Scripture manifested by Unitarian Writers | 173 |
| No. XV.—On the Heathen notions of merit entertained by Unitarians | 178 |
| No. XVI.—On Dr. JOHN TAYLOR'S scheme of Atonement | 181 |
| No. XVII.—The doctrine of Atonement falsely charged with the presumption of pronouncing on the necessity of Christ's death | 188 |
| No. XVIII.—On the mode of reasoning, whereby the sufficiency of good works without mediation is attempted to be defended from Scripture | 194 |
| No. XIX.—The want of a discoverable connexion between the means and the end, equally applies to every Scheme of Atonement | 199 |
| No. XX.—On the Scripture phrase of our being reconciled to God | 202 |
| No. XXI.—On the true distinction between the laying aside our enmity to God , and being reconciled to God | 207 |
| No. XXII.—On the proofs from Scripture, that the Sinner is the object of the Divine displeasure | 208 |
| No. XXIII.—Instance from the book of Job, of Sacrifice being prescribed, to avert God's Anger | 212 |
| No. XXIV.—On the Attribute of the DIVINE JUSTICE | 214 |

CONTENTS.

VOL. I.

| | |
|---|-----|
| No. XXV.—On the text in John , describing our Lord as the Lamb of God , which taketh away the sins of the world | 216 |
| No. XXVI.—On the meaning of the word PROPITIATION in the New Testament | 220 |
| No. XXVII.—On the texts describing Christ's death as a SACRIFICE FOR SIN | 222 |
| No. XXVIII.—On the word ΚΑΤΑΛΛΑΓΗ, translated as Atonement in Rom. v. 11 .. | 243 |
| No. XXIX.—On the Denial that Christ's death is described in Scripture as a SIN-OFFERING | 245 |
| No. XXX.—On the sense , in which Christ is said in Scripture to have DIED FOR US | 247 |
| No. XXXI.—On the pretence of FIGURATIVE ALLUSION in the Sacrificial terms of the New Testament | 253 |
| No. XXXII.—Arguments to prove the sacrificial language of the New Testament figurative , urged by H. TAYLOR and DR. PRIESTLEY | 256 |
| No. XXXIII.—On the sense entertained generally by all, and more especially instanced amongst the Jews, of the NECESSITY OF PROPITIATORY EXPLANATION | 257 |
| No. XXXIV.—On H. Taylor's objection, of the want of a literal correspondence between the MOSAIC SACRIFICE and the DEATH OF CHRIST | 293 |
| No. XXXV.—On the arguments by which it is attempted to prove the PASSOVER NOT TO BE A SACRIFICE | 297 |
| No. XXXVI.—On the meaning of the word translated ATONEMENT, in the OLD TESTAMENT | 322 |
| No. XXXVII.—On the efficacy of the MOSAIC ATONEMENT, as applied to cases of MORAL TRANSGRESSION | 333 |

CONTENTS.

VOL. I.

| | |
|--|-----|
| No. XXXVIII.—On the VICARIOUS IMPORT of the Mosaic sacrifices | 352 |
| No. XXXIX.—On the imposition of hands upon the head of the victim | 366 |
| No. XL.—On the sufficiency of the proof of the PRO- PITIATORY NATURE OF THE MOSAIC SACRIFICES, independent of the argument which establishes their vicarious import | 378 |
| No. XLI.—On the divine institution of sacrifice , and the traces thereof discoverable in the heathen cor- ruptions of the rite | 379 |
| No. XLII.—On the Death of Christ as a TRUE PRO- PITIATORY SACRIFICE for the sins of mankind .. | 395 |
| No. XLIII.—On the inconsistency of the reasoning whereby the death of Christ is maintained to have been BUT FIGURATIVELY a sacrifice | 483 |
| No. XLIV.—On the nature of the SACRIFICE FOR SIN | 484 |
| No. XLV.—On the effect of the doctrine of Atonement , in producing sentiments favourable to Virtue and Religion | 485 |

VOL. II.

| | |
|---|----|
| No. XLVI.—On the supposition that sacrifice origi- nated in PRIESTCRAFT | 1 |
| No. XLVII.—On the supposition that the Mosaic sa- crifices originated in HUMAN INVENTION | 2 |
| No. XLVIII.— Sacrifices explained as GIFTS by vari- ous writers | 18 |
| No. XLIX.— Sacrifices explained as FEDERAL RITES .. | 21 |
| No. L.—BISHOP WARBURTON'S Theory of the Origin of Sacrifice | 28 |
| No. LI.—The supposition that sacrifices originated in GIFTS, erroneous | 30 |

CONTENTS

VOL. II.

| | |
|--|-----|
| No. LII.—On the date of the permission of ANIMAL FOOD to man | 31 |
| No. LIII.—On the DIVINE ORIGIN of LANGUAGE | 46 |
| No. LIV.—On the natural unreasonableness of the Sa- crificial rite | 70 |
| No. LV.—On the universality of Sacrifice | 71 |
| No. LVI.—On the universality of the notion of the EXPIATORY VIRTUE of Sacrifice | 74 |
| No. LVII.—On the objections against the supposition of the DIVINE INSTITUTION OF SACRIFICE | 76 |
| No. LVIII.—On the SACRIFICE OF ABEL as evincing the divine institution of Sacrifice | 87 |
| No. LIX.—On the history and the book of JOB | 91 |
| No. LX.—On Grotius's strange misconception of the nature of Abel's sacrifice | 203 |
| No. LXI.—On the difference in the divine reception of the sacrifices of CAIN and ABEL | 208 |
| No. LXII.—On the true meaning of the phrase, ΠΑΕΙ- ΟΝΑ ΘΥΣΙΑΝ, attributed to the Sacrifice of Abel | 213 |
| No. LXIII.—On the nature and grounds of the FAITH evidenced by the Sacrifice of Abel | 224 |
| No. LXIV.—On the probable TIME AND OCCASION of the institution of sacrifice | 229 |
| No. LXV.—On the true interpretation of the passage, GEN. iv. 7. containing God's expostulation with Cain | 235 |
| No. LXVI.—On the comparison between the sacrifice of ABEL and that of CHRIST | 250 |
| No. LXVII.—On the nature of SACRIFICE BEFORE THE LAW: tending to shew its confinement to animal sacrifice , except in the case of Cain | 250 |
| No. LXVIII.—On the DISPROPORTION between the ef- fects of the Mosaic and the Christian Sacrifices | 254 |

CONTENTS.

VOL. II.

| | |
|--|-----|
| No. LXIX.—On the CORRESPONDENCE between the sacrificial language of the Old Testament , and that employed in the New to describe Redemption by the Death of Christ : and the original adaptation of the former to the subject of the latter | 262 |
| Postscript to Number LXIX: on BOLINGBROKE and HUME | 299 |
| No. LXX.—On the CORRESPONDENCE between the Annual Expiation under the Law , and the One Great Expiation under the Gospel | 342 |
| No. LXXI.—On the nature and import of the ceremony of the SCAPE GOAT | 344 |
| No. LXXII.—Socinian objections urged by a Divine of the Established Church, against the doctrine of the vicarious import of the Mosaic sacrifices, and against other doctrines of the Church of England | 347 |
| No. LXXIII.—The Atonement by the sacrifice of Christ more strictly vicarious, than that by the Mosaic sacrifices whereby it was typified | 380 |
| No. LXXIV.—CONCLUDING NUMBER | 381 |
| APPENDIX, containing an account of the UNITARIAN SCHEME, as described by Mr. BELSHAM | 385 |
| INDEX of the Principal Matters | 497 |
| INDEX of Texts | 522 |
| LIST OF BOOKS | 534 |

PREFATORY ADDRESS.

TO THE
STUDENTS IN DIVINITY
IN THE UNIVERSITY OF DUBLIN.

THE following Discourses, originally composed with a view to your instruction, are now with the same design submitted to your more deliberate examination.

In these latter days, Christianity seems destined to undergo a fiercer trial, than it has for many centuries experienced. Its defenders are called upon, not merely to resist the avowed invader, who assails the citadel from without, but the concealed and treacherous foe, who undermines the works, or tampers with the garrison within. The temporising Christian, who, under the mask of liberality, surrenders the fundamental doctrines of his creed; and the imposing Rationalist, who, by the illusions of a factitious resemblance, endeavours to substitute philosophy for the gospel; are enemies even more to be dreaded, than the declared and systematic Deist. The open attacks of the one, directed against the Evidences of Christianity, have but served to strengthen the great outworks of our faith, by calling to its aid the united powers of its adherents: whilst the machinations of the others, secretly employed against the Doctrines of our religion, threaten, by eluding the vigilance, and lulling the suspicions, of its friends, to subvert through fraud, what had been found impregnable by force. To aid these machinations, a modern and depraved philosophy hath sent abroad its pernicious sophistries, infecting the sources of morality, and enervating the powers of manly thought; and the better to effect these purposes, clad in those engaging colours, which are peculiarly adapted to captivate the imaginations of young and ardent minds. Against arts and enemies, such as these, the most strenuous exertions of all who value the religion of Christ, are at this moment imperiously demanded.

In what manner to prepare for this conflict, we are informed on high authority. We are to take unto us the whole armour of God—having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and our feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace: above all, taking the shield of FAITH, wherewith we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked: and taking the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is THE WORD OF GOD. These are the arms, which are to ensure us victory in the contest:—and without these arms, we neither can, nor ought to stand. A conspiracy the most deep and deadly has been formed against Christianity. The Powers of darkness have combined their mightiest efforts. If then the sentinels of the Gospel sleep upon their posts, if they do not instantly rouse to its defence, they are guilty of the blackest treason to their heavenly master. There is no room for truce or accommodation. The Captain of our salvation has declared, that he that is not with him is against him. The force of this declaration is at this day peculiarly manifest. It is now become necessary, that a broad and distinct line should be drawn, between those who truly acknowledge the authority of Revelation, and those who, whilst they wear the semblance of Christians, but lend the more effectual support to the enemies of Christianity.

These reflexions, though befitting all who profess the religion of Christ, press peculiarly on those, who are destined to teach and to enforce his word. To you, my young friends, who look forward to the clerical office, they are important beyond description: and, if allowed their due weight upon your minds, they cannot fail to stimulate to the most zealous and effectual exertions in your pursuit of sacred knowledge. Already, indeed, has a more enlivened spirit of religious inquiry been manifested amongst you. To promote that spirit, and to supply some additional security against the prevailing delusions of the day, these Discourses, on the doctrines of Atonement and Sacrifice,—doctrines against which, above all others, the Deist, and the Rationalising Christian, direct their attacks,—were originally delivered, and are now published.

The desire expressed for their publication, by the existing divinity classes, had been long since complied with, but for the addition of certain arduous Academic duties to the ordinary engagements of the Author's Collegiate situation. To those, who are so well acquainted with the laborious employment, which those duties and engagements necessarily impose, no apology can be requisite on the ground of delay. More than twelve months have elapsed, since the greater part of these sheets were committed to the press: and the prosecution of the subject, has been unavoidably suspended during a considerable portion of the intervening period.

The form, in which the work is now presented, seems more to require explanation. The first design extended only, to the publication of the two discourses, with a few occasional and supplementary remarks: and on this plan, the sermons were sent to press. But on farther consideration, it appeared advisable to enter into a more accurate, and extensive, examination of the subject: even though a short text should thereby be contrasted with a disproportionate body of Notes. The great vice of the present day, is a presumptuous precipitancy of judgment: and there is nothing, from which the cause of Christianity, as well as of general knowledge, has suffered more severely, than from that impatience of investigation, and that confidence of decision upon hasty and partial views, which mark the literary character of an age, undeservedly extolled for its improvements in reasoning and philosophy. A false taste in morals, is naturally connected with a false taste in literature: and the period of vicious dissipation, is not likely to prove the era of dispassionate, and careful, enquiry. There is, however, no short way to truth. The nature of things will not accommodate itself, to the laziness, the interests, or the vices of men. The paths, which lead to knowledge, are unalterably fixed; and can be traced, only by slow and cautious steps.

From these considerations, it was judged expedient to reduce the subject of these discourses, and the crude and superficial reasonings which have of late been exercised upon it, to a stricter and more minute test of enquiry. For this purpose, the present plan has been adopted as the best suited to that exactness of critical investigation which is due to the importance of the subject: and as the most fitly calculated, to direct the thoughts of the student, to the most useful topics of enquiry, and the most profitable sources of information. Such a plan, I have little doubt, will be favourably received by those, whose minds, trained in the habits of close deduction, and exercised in the researches of accurate science, cannot but be readily disposed to accept, in the place of general assertion and plausible declamation, a careful review of facts, and a cautious examination of scripture.

One circumstance, which is of no mean value in the method here pursued, is, that it enables us, without interrupting the thread of enquiry, to canvass and appreciate the pretensions of certain modern writers, whose high tone of self-admiration, and loud vauntings of superior knowledge, have been but too successful in obtaining for them a partial, and temporary, ascendancy in public opinion; and who have employed the influence derived from that ascendancy, to weaken the truths of Christianity, and to sap the dearest interests of man. I trust, that you, my young readers, will see enough in the Illustrations and Explanatory Dissertations accompanying these Discourses, to convince you of the emptiness of their claims to that superiority, which, did they possess it, would be applied to purposes so injurious. You will, probably, see sufficient reason to pronounce, that their pretensions to philosophic distinction, and their claims to critical pre-eminence, stand on no better grounds, than their assumption of the exclusive profession of a pure Christianity. The confident and overbearing language of such men, you will then regard as you ought: and from the review of their reasonings, and the detail of their religious opinions, you will naturally be led to feel the full value of the duly regulated discipline of the youthful understanding, in those severer exercises of scientific study, which give vigour to the intellect, and steadiness to the judgment; and the still greater value, of that early reverence for the mysterious sublimities of religion, which teaches the humility becoming man's highest powers, when directed to the yet higher things of God.—

The half learning of modern times, has been the fruitful parent, of multiplied evils: and it is not without good cause, that the innovating theorist of the present day, makes it his first object to abridge the work of education, and under the pretence of introducing a system of more immediate practical utility, to exclude that wholesome discipline, and regular institution, which are essential to conduct the faculties of the young mind, to sound and manly strength.

I cannot conclude this prefatory address, without indulging in the gratifying reflexion, that, whilst the deceptions of wit, and the fascinations of eloquence, combined with a wily sophistry, and an imposing confidence, have but too frequently produced their pernicious effects, to the detriment of a true Christian faith, on the minds of the inexperienced, and unreflecting; these audacious attempts have seldom found, in this place, any other reception, than that of contempt and aversion:—and with true pleasure I feel myself justified in pronouncing with confidence, that, so long as the Students of this Seminary, intended for the office of the ministry, continue to evince

the same serious attention to religious subjects, which has of late years so honourably distinguished numbers of your body, and so profitably rewarded the zealous labours of your instructors in sacred literature, Christianity will have little to fear in this land from such attempts.

That you may gloriously persevere, in these laudable efforts to attain the most useful of all learning, and in the conscientious endeavour to qualify yourselves for the due discharge of the most momentous of all duties: that so the work of God may not suffer in your hands; but that being judged fit dispensers of that wisdom which is from above, you may hereafter be enabled to turn many to righteousness, and finally to obtain the recompence of the good and faithful servants of Christ, is the ardent wish and prayer, of your very sincere friend,

THE AUTHOR.

APRIL 22, 1801.

ADVERTISEMENT

TO THE

SECOND EDITION.

IT is now nearly seven years, since application was made to the Author, by his Bookseller, for a new Edition of the DISCOURSES ON THE SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINES OF ATONEMENT AND SACRIFICE. It being his intention to introduce into the work, considerable alterations in point of form, and considerable additions in point of matter; he deferred complying with the Bookseller's desire, until he should be able to accomplish this intention. The same preventive causes, to which in the PREFATORY ADDRESS TO THE STUDENTS he had occasion formerly to advert, again operated to produce delay; and have occasioned this late appearance of the promised publication. The work, which now issues from the press, was, he is almost ashamed to avow, committed to it in the June of 1807—It is only to those, however, who are unacquainted with the nature of the Author's academic occupations, that he feels any explanation to be necessary upon this head. He takes this occasion also to apologize, on the same ground, for the non-appearance of certain other works, for which he stands engaged to the public; and which, although for some years nearly completed, he has not had time to carry through the press.

SEPT. 21, 1809.

ADVERTISEMENT

TO THE

THIRD EDITION.

IN the Edition now given to the public, additional matter, which, it is hoped, may bestow some additional value, has been introduced; and a few changes (conceived to be improvements) in form and arrangement, have been adopted. The principal additions will be found in Numbers VII. VIII. XII. XIV. XVII. XXVII. XXX. XLI. XLII. LIII. LXV. LXIX. and its Postscript; and in the last forty pages of the Appendix. The Index of Matters, and List of Books, are likewise enlarged: and a new Index, of Texts, is introduced. The alterations of arrangement chiefly affect Numbers XXXV. LIX. LXIX.—The Syriac quotations are printed in their proper character; which could not be done in the former Editions, from the want of a Syriac type. It should be remarked also, for the better understanding of certain parts of the work, especially the notes in page 160 and page 479 of the first volume, that the Edition, was sent to press early in the year 1810; although, from unavoidable delays it only now makes its appearance.

JANUARY 1st, 1812.

TWO DISCOURSES
ON THE SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINES
OF
ATONEMENT & SACRIFICE; DELIVERED IN THE CHAPEL OF TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN; ON GOOD FRIDAY,
IN THE YEARS 1798, AND 1799.

DISCOURSE I.

1 COR. i. 23, 24.

“ But we preach CHRIST CRUCIFIED, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called—CHRIST, the power of GOD, and the wisdom of GOD.”

THAT the sublime mystery of the Redemption, should have escaped the comprehension, both of the Jew, and of the Greek : that a Crucified Saviour, should have given offence to the worldly expectant of a Triumphant Messiah, whilst the proud philosopher of the schools, turned with disdain, from the humiliating doctrine, which proclaimed the insufficiency of human reason, and threatened to bend its aspiring head before the foot of the Cross—were events, which the matured growth of national prejudice, on the one hand, and the habits of contentious discussion, aided by a depraved moral system, on the other, might, in the natural course of things, have been expected to produce.—That the Son of God had descended from Heaven : that he had disrobed himself^a of the Glory, which he had with the Father, before the world began: that he had assumed the form, of the humblest, and most degraded, of men: that submitting to a life of reproach, and want, and sorrow, he had closed the scene, with a death of ignominy and torture; and that through this voluntary degradation and suffering, a way of reconciliation with the Supreme Being had been opened to the whole human race; and an atonement made for those transgressions, from the punishment of which unassisted reason could have devised no means of escape: these are truths, which prejudice and pride could not fail, at all times, to have rejected: and these are truths, to which the irreligion and self-sufficiency of the present day, oppose obstacles not less insurmountable than those which the prejudice of the Jew, and the philosophy of the Greek presented, in the age of the Apostle. For, at this day, when we boast a wider diffusion of learning, and more extensive acquirements of moral knowledge, do we not find these fundamental truths of Revelation questioned? Do we not see the haughtiness of lettered scepticism, presuming to reject the proffered terms of Salvation, because it cannot trace, with the finger of human science, the connexion between the cross of Christ and the redemption of man? But to these vain and presumptuous aspirings after knowledge placed beyond human reach, we are commanded to preach CHRIST CRUCIFIED: which, however it may, to the self-fancied wise ones of this world, appear as foolishness, is yet, to those who will humble their understanding to the dispensations of the Almighty, the grandest display of the divine perfections; Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God.

^a See No. I.

To us also, my Brethren, who profess a conviction of this truth; and who are called on by the return of this day, more ^b particularly to recollect the great work of Salvation, wrought out for us by the memorable event which it records; it may not be unprofitable, to take a short view of the objections, that have been urged against this fundamental ^c doctrine of our religion: that so we may the better discern those snares, which beset the Christian path; and that being guarded against the obstructions, which are insidiously raised, against that true and gospel faith, whereby alone we can hope for acceptance and happiness, we may be able to place the great pillar of our hopes, upon a basis, which no force can shake, and no art can undermine.

In the consideration of this subject, which every Christian must deem most highly deserving the closest examination, our attention should be directed to two different classes of objectors: those, who deny the necessity of any mediation whatever; and those, who question the particular nature of that mediation, which has been appointed. Whilst the Deist, on the one hand, ridicules the very notion of a Mediator: and the philosophizing Christian, on the other, fashions it to his own hypothesis: we are called on to vindicate the word of truth, from the injurious attacks of both; and carefully to secure it, not only against the open assaults of its avowed enemies, but against the more dangerous misrepresentations, of its false, or mistaken friends.

^b See No. II.

^c See No. III.

The objections, which are peculiar to the former, are upon this subject, of the same description with those, which they advance against every other part of Revelation; bearing with equal force, against the system of Natural Religion, which they support, as against the doctrines of Revealed Religion, which they oppose. And indeed, this single circumstance, if weighed with candour and reflexion; that is, if the Deist were truly the Philosopher he pretends to be; might suffice to convince him of his error. For the closeness of the analogy between the works of Nature and the word of the Gospel, being found to be such, that every blow, which is aimed at the one, rebounds with undiminished force against the other: the conviction of their common origin, must be the inference of unbiassed understanding.

Thus, when in the outset of his argument, the Deist tells us, that as obedience must be the object of God's approbation, and disobedience the ground of his displeasure; it must follow by natural consequence, that when Men have transgressed the divine commands, repentance and amendment of life will place them, in the same situation, as if they had never offended :—he does not recollect, that actual experience of the course of Nature, directly contradicts the assertion; and that, in the common occurrences of life, the man, who by intemperance, and voluptuousness, has injured his character, his fortune, and his health, does not find himself instantly restored to the full enjoyment of these blessings, on repenting of his past misconduct, and determining on future amendment. Now, if the attributes of the Deity demand, that the punishment should not outlive the crime; on what ground shall we justify this temporal dispensation? The difference in degree, cannot affect the question in the least. It matters not, whether the punishment be of long, or of short duration; whether in this world, or in the next. If the justice or the goodness of God, require, that punishment should not be inflicted, when repentance has taken place; it must be a violation of those attributes, to permit any punishment whatever, the most slight, or the most transient. Nor will it avail to say, that the evils of this life attendant upon vice, are the effects of an established constitution, and follow in the way of natural consequence. Is not that established constitution itself, the effect of the divine decree? And are not its several operations as much the appointment of its Almighty framer, as if they had individually flowed from his immediate direction? But besides, what reason have we to suppose that God's treatment of us in a future state, will not be of the same nature as we find it in this; according to established rules, and in the way of natural consequence? Many circumstances might be urged, on the contrary, to evince the likelihood that it will. But this is not necessary to our present purpose. It is sufficient, that the Deist cannot prove that it will not. Our experience of the present state of things evinces, that indemnity is not the consequence of repentance, here: can he adduce a counter-experience to shew, that, it will, hereafter? The justice and goodness of God are not then necessarily concerned, in virtue of the sinner's repentance, to remove all evil consequent upon sin in the next life, or else the arrangement of events in this, has not been regulated by the dictates of justice and goodness. If the Deist admits the latter, what becomes of his Natural Religion?

Now let us enquire, whether the conclusions of abstract reasoning, will coincide with the deductions of experience. If obedience be at all times our duty, in what way can present repentance release us from the punishment of former transgressions^d? Can repentance annihilate what is past? Or, can we do more, by present obedience, than acquit ourselves of present obligation? Or, does the contrition we experience, added to the positive duties we discharge, constitute a surplusage of merit, which may be transferred to the reduction of our former demerit? And is the justification of the Philosopher, who is too enlightened to be a Christian, to be built, after all, upon the absurdities of supererogation? "We may as well affirm," says a learned Divine, "that our former obedience atones for our present sins, as that our present obedience makes amends for antecedent transgressions." And it is surely with a peculiar ill grace, that this sufficiency of repentance is urged by those, who deny the possible efficacy of Christ's mediation; since the ground, on which they deny the latter, equally serves for the rejection of the former: the necessary connexion, between the merits of one being, and the acquittal of another, not being less conceivable, than that which is conceived to subsist between obedience at one time, and the forgiveness of disobedience at another.

^d See No. IV.

Since then, upon the whole, experience (as // far as it extends) goes to prove the natural inefficacy of repentance to remove the effects of past transgressions; and the abstract reason of the thing, can furnish no link, whereby to connect present obedience, with forgiveness of former sins: it follows, that however the contemplation of God's infinite goodness and love, might excite

some faint hope, that mercy would be extended to the sincerely penitent; the animating certainty of this momentous truth, without which the religious sense can have no place, can be derived from the express communication of the Deity alone. ^e

But it is yet urged by those, who would measure the proceedings of divine wisdom by the standard of their own reason; that, admitting the necessity of a Revelation on this subject, it had been sufficient for the Deity, to have made known to man his benevolent intention: and that the circuitous apparatus of the scheme of redemption, must have been superfluous, for the purpose of rescuing the world from the terrors and dominion of sin; when this might have been effected, in a way infinitely more simple, and intelligible, and better calculated to excite our gratitude and love, merely by proclaiming to mankind a free pardon, and perfect indemnity, on condition of repentance, and amendment.

To the disputer, who would thus prescribe to God, the mode, by which he may best conduct his creatures to happiness, we might as before reply, by the application of his own argument, to the course of ordinary events: and we might demand of him to inform us, wherefore, the Deity should have left the sustenance of life, depending on the tedious process of human labour and contrivance, in rearing from a small seed, and conducting to the perfection fitting it for the use of man, the necessary article of nourishment; when the end might have been at once accomplished, by its instantaneous production. And will he contend, that bread has not been ordained for the support of man; because that, instead of the present circuitous mode of its production, it might have been rained down from heaven, like the manna in the wilderness? On grounds such as these, the Philosopher (as he wishes to be called) may be safely allowed to object to the notion of forgiveness by a Mediator.

With respect to every such objection as this, it may be well, once for all, to make this general observation. We find, from the whole course of nature, that God governs the world, not by independent acts, but by connected system. The instruments which he employs, in the ordinary works of his Providence, are not physically necessary to his operations. He might have acted without them, if he pleased. “ He might, for instance, have created all men, without the intervention of parents: but where then had been the beneficial connexion between parents and children; and the numerous advantages resulting to human society, from such connexion?” The difficulty lies here: the uses, arising from the connexions of God’s acts may be various; and such are the pregnancies of his works, that a single act may answer a prodigious variety of purposes. Of these several purposes we are, for the most part, ignorant: and from this ignorance are derived, most of our weak objections against the ways of his Providence; whilst we foolishly presume, that, like human agents, he has but one end in view. ^f

This observation we shall find of material use, in our examination of the remaining arguments, adduced by the Deist, on the present subject. And there is none to which it more forcibly applies than to that, by which he endeavours to prove the notion of a Mediator to be inconsistent with the divine immutability. It is either, he affirms,^g agreeable to the will of God, to grant salvation on repentance, and then he will grant it without a Mediator: or it is not agreeable to his will, and then a Mediator can be of no avail, unless we admit the mutability of the divine decrees.

But the objector is not perhaps aware, how far this reasoning will extend. Let us try it in the case of prayer. All such things, as are agreeable to the will of God, must be accomplished, whether we pray or not, and therefore our prayers are useless, unless they be supposed to have a power of altering his will. And indeed, with equal conclusiveness it might be proved, that Repentance itself must be unnecessary. For if it be fit that our sins should be forgiven, God will forgive us without repentance: and if it be unfit, repentance can be of no avail.^h

^f See No VI.

^g See No. VIII.

^h See No. VIII.

The error in all these conclusions is the same. It consists in mistaking a conditional for an absolute decree; and in supposing God to ordain an end unalterably, without any concern as to the intermediate steps, whereby that end is to be accomplished. Whereas the manner is sometimes as necessary as the act proposed: so that if not done in that particular way, it would not have been done at all. Of this observation, abundant illustration may be derived, as well from natural, as from revealed religion. “Thus we know from natural religion, that it is agreeable to the will of God, that the distresses of mankind should be relieved: and yet we see the destitute, from a wise constitution of Providence, left to the precarious benevolence of their fellow-men; and if not relieved by them, they are not relieved at all. In like manner, in Revelation, in the case of Naaman the Syrian, we find that God was willing he should be healed of his leprosy; but yet he was not willing that it should be done, except in one particular manner. Abana and Pharpar were as famous as any of the rivers of Israel. Could he not wash in them, and be clean? Certainly he might, if the design of God had been no more than to heal him. Or it might have been done without any washing at all. But the healing was not the only design of God, nor the most important. The manner of the cure was of more consequence in the moral design of God, than the cure itself: the effect being produced, for the sake of manifesting to the whole kingdom of Syria, the great power of the God of Israel, by which the cure was performed." And in like manner, though God willed, that the penitent sinner should receive forgiveness; we may see good reason, why, agreeably to his usual proceeding, he might will it to be granted in one particular manner only; through the intervention of a Mediator.ⁱ

Although in the present stage of the subject, in which we are concerned with the objections of the DEIST, the argument should be confined to the deductions of natural reason; yet I have added this instance from Revelation, because, strange to say, some who assume the name of Christians, and profess not altogether to discard the written word of Revelation, adopt the very principle, which we have just examined. For what are the doctrines of that description of Christians,^k in the sister kingdom, who glory, in having brought down the high things of God, to the level of man's understanding?—That Christ was a person sent into the world, to promulgate the will of God: to communicate new lights, on the subject of religious duties: by his life, to set an example of perfect obedience: by his death to manifest his sincerity: and by his resurrection, to convince us of the great truth which he had been commissioned to teach, our rising again to future life. This, say they, is the sum and substance of Christianity. It furnishes a purer mo-

ⁱ See No. IX.

^k See No. X.

rality, and a more operative enforcement: its morality more pure, as built on juster notions of the divine nature: and its enforcement more operative, as founded on a certainty of a state of retribution.¹—And is then Christianity nothing, but a new and more formal promulgation of the religion of nature? Is the death of Christ but an attestation of his truth? And are we after all left to our own merit for acceptance; and obliged to trust for our Salvation, to the perfection of our obedience? Then, indeed, has the great Author of our Religion, in vain submitted to the agonies of the cross; if after having given to mankind a law, which leaves them less excusable in their transgressions, he has left them to be judged by the rigour of that law, and to stand or fall by their own personal deserts.

It is said, indeed, that as by this new dispensation, the certainty of pardon on repentance, has been made known, mankind has been informed of all, that is essential in the doctrine of mediation. But granting, that no more was intended to be conveyed, than the sufficiency of repentance; yet it remains to be considered, in what way that repentance was likely to be brought about. Was the bare declaration, that God would forgive the repentant sinner, sufficient to ensure his amendment? Or was it not rather calculated, to render him easy under guilt, from the facility of reconciliation? What was there to alarm, to rouse, the sinner from the apathy of habitual transgression? What was there to make that impression which the nature of God's moral government demands? Shall we say, that the grateful sense of divine mercy would be sufficient; and that the generous feelings of our nature, awakened by the supreme goodness, would have secured our obedience? that is, shall we say, that the love of virtue, and of right, would have maintained man in his allegiance? And have we not, then, had abundant experience of what man can do when left to his own exertions, to be cured of such vain and idle fancies? What is the history of man, from the creation to the time of Christ, but a continued trial of his natural strength? And what has been the moral of that history, but that man is strong, only as he feels himself weak?—strong, only as he feels, that his nature is corrupt, and from a consciousness of that corruption, is led to place his whole reliance upon God?—What is the description, which the Apostle of the Gentiles has left us, of the state of the world, at the coming of our Saviour?—being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful—who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them. †

¹ See No. XI.

Here were the fruits of that natural goodness of the human heart, which is the favourite theme and fundamental principle, with that class of Christians, with whom we are at present concerned. And have we not then, had full experiment, of our natural powers? ^mAnd shall we yet have the madness, to fly back to our own sufficiency, and our own merits, and to turn away from that gracious support, which is offered to us, through the mediation of Christ? No: lost as men were, at the time Christ appeared, to all sense of true Religion: lost as they must be to it, at all times, when left to a proud confidence in their own sufficiency; nothing short of a strong, and salutary terror, could awaken them to virtue. Without some striking expression of God's abhorrence of sin, which might work powerfully on the imagination, and the heart, what could prove a sufficient counteraction, to the violent impulse of natural passions? what, to the entailed depravation, which the history of man, no less than the voice of Revelation, pronounces to have infected the whole human race? Besides, without a full and adequate sense of guilt, the very notion of forgiveness, as it relates to us, is unintelligible. We can have no idea of forgiveness, unless conscious of something to be forgiven. Ignorant of our forgiveness, we remain ignorant of that goodness which confers it. And thus, without some proof of God's hatred for sin, we remain unacquainted with the greatness of his love.

† Rom. i. 29, 30, 31, 32.

^m See No. XII.

The simple promulgation then, of forgiveness on repentance, could not answer the purpose. Merely to know the condition could avail nothing. An inducement, of sufficient force to ensure its fulfilment, was essential. The system of sufficiency had been fully tried, to satisfy mankind of its folly. It was now time to introduce a new system, the system of humility. And for this purpose, what expedient could have been devised more suitable, than that which has been adopted?—the sacrifice of the Son of God, for the sins of men: proclaiming to the world, by the greatness of the ransom, the immensity of the guilt:ⁿ and thence, at the same time evincing, in the most fearful manner, God's utter abhorrence of sin, in requiring such expiation; and the infinity of his love, in appointing it.

To this expedient for man's salvation, though it be the clear and express language of Scripture, I have as yet sought no support from the authority of Scripture itself. Having hitherto had to contend, with the Deist, who denies all Revelation; and the pretended Christian, who rationalizing away its substance, finds it a mere moral system, and can discover in it no trace of a Redeemer to urge the declarations of Scripture, as to the particular nature of redemption, would be to no purpose. Its authority disclaimed by the one, and evaded by the other, each becomes unassailable on any ground, but that which he has chosen for himself, the ground of general reason.

ⁿ See No. XIII.

But, we come now to consider the objections of a class of Christians who, as they profess to derive their arguments from the language and meaning of ° Scripture, will enable us to try the subject of our discussion, by the only true standard, the word of Revelation. And indeed, it were most sincerely to be wished, that the doctrines of Scripture, were at all times collected purely from the Scripture itself: and that preconceived notions, and arbitrary theories were not first to be formed, and then the Scripture pressed into the service of each fanciful dogma. If God has vouchsafed a Revelation, has he not thereby imposed a duty of submitting our understandings to its perfect wisdom? Shall weak, short-sighted man presume to say? “If I find the discoveries of Revelation, correspond to my notions of what is right and fit, I will admit them: but if they do not, I am sure they cannot be the genuine sense of Scripture: and I am sure of it, on this principle, that the wisdom of God cannot disagree with itself.” That is, to express it truly, that the wisdom of God, cannot but agree with what this judge of the actions of the Almighty, deems it wise for him to do. The language of Scripture must then, by every possible refinement, be made to surrender its fair, and natural meaning, to this pre-determination of its necessary import. But the word of Revelation being thus pared down to the puny dimensions of human reason, how differs the Christian from the Deist? The only difference is this: that whilst the one denies, that God hath given us a Revelation; the other, compelled by evidence to receive it, endeavours to render it of no effect. But in both, there is the same self-sufficiency, the same pride of understanding, that would erect itself on the ground of human reason, and that disdains to accept the divine favour, on any conditions, but its own. In both, in short, the very characteristic of a Christian spirit is wanting—HUMILITY. For in what consists the entire of Christianity, but in this; that feeling an utter incapacity to work out our own salvation, we submit our whole-selves, our hearts, and our understandings, to the divine disposal; and relying on God's gracious assistance, ensured to our honest endeavours to obtain it, through the mediation of Christ Jesus, we look up to him, and to him alone, for safety? Nay, what is the very notion of religion, but this humble reliance upon God? Take this away, and we become a race of independent beings, claiming as a debt, the reward of our good works^p; a sort of contracting party with the Almighty, contributing nought to his glory, but anxious to maintain our own independence, and our own rights. And is it not, to subdue this rebellious spirit, which is necessarily at war with Virtue and with God, that Christianity has been introduced? Does not every page of Revelation, peremptorily pronounce this; and yet, shall we exercise this spirit, even upon Christianity itself? Assuredly, if we do; if, on the contrary, our pride of understanding, and self-sufficiency of reason, are not made to prostrate themselves before the awfully mysterious truths of Revelation; if we do not bring down the rebellious spirit of our nature, to confess that the wisdom of man is but foolishness with God; we may bear the name of Christians, but we want the essence of Christianity.

° See No. XIV.

^p See No. XV.

These observations, though they apply in their full extent, only to those who reduce Christianity to a system purely rational; yet are, in a certain degree, applicable to the description of Christians, whose notion of Redemption we now come to consider. For what but a preconceived theory, to which Scripture had been compelled to yield its obvious and genuine signification, could ever have led to the opinion, that in the death of Christ, there was no expiation for sin; that the word sacrifice has been used by the writers of the New Testament, merely in a figurative sense; and that the whole doctrine of the Redemption, amounts but to this, "that God, willing to pardon repentant sinners, and at the same time willing to do it, only in that way, which would best promote the cause of virtue, appointed that Jesus Christ should come into the world; and that he, having taught the pure doctrines of the Gospel; having passed a life of exemplary virtue; having endured many sufferings, and finally death itself, to prove his truth, and perfect his obedience; and having risen again, to manifest the certainty of a future state; has, not only, by his example, proposed to mankind a pattern for imitation; but has, by the merits of his obedience, obtained, through his intercession, as a reward, a kingdom or government over the world, whereby he is enabled, to bestow pardon, and final happiness, upon all who will accept them, on the terms of sincere repentance."⁹ That is, in other words, we receive salvation through a Mediator: the mediation conducted, through intercession: and that intercession successful, in recompence of the meritorious obedience of our Redeemer.

Here indeed, we find the notion of redemption admitted: but in setting up, for this purpose, the doctrine of pure intercession, in opposition to that of atonement, we shall perhaps discover, when properly examined, some small tincture of that mode of reasoning, which as we have seen, has led the modern Socinian to contend against the idea of Redemption at large ; and the Deist, against that of Revelation itself.

⁹ See No. XVI.

For the present, let us confine our attention, to the objections, which the patrons of this new system, bring against the principle of atonement, as set forth in the doctrines of that church, to which we more immediately belong. As for those, which are founded in views of general reason, a little reflexion will convince us, that there is not any, which can be alleged against the latter, that may not be urged, with equal force, against the former : not a single difficulty, with which it is attempted to encumber the one, that does not equally embarrass the other. This having been evinced, we shall then see, how little reason there was, for relinquishing the plain and natural meaning of Scripture; and for opening the door, to a latitude of interpretation, in which it is but too much the fashion to indulge at the present day, and which if persevered in, must render the word of God, a nullity.

The first, and most important of the objections we have now to consider, is that which represents the doctrine of atonement, as founded on the divine implacability—inasmuch as it supposes, that to appease the rigid justice of God, it was requisite that punishment should be inflicted; and that, consequently, the sinner could not by any means have been released, had not Christ suffered in his stead.^r Were

this a faithful statement of the doctrine of atonement, there had indeed been just ground for the objection. But that this is not the fair representation of candid truth, let the objector feel, by the application of the same mode of reasoning, to the system which he upholds. If it was necessary to the forgiveness of man, that Christ should suffer; and through the merits of his obedience, and as the fruit of his intercession, obtain the power of granting that forgiveness; does it not follow, that had not Christ thus suffered, and interceded, we could not have been forgiven? And has he not then, as it were, taken us out of the hands of a severe and strict judge; and is it not to him alone that we owe our pardon? Here the argument is exactly parallel, and the objection of implacability equally applies. Now what is the answer? "That although it is through the merits and intercession of Christ, that we are forgiven; yet these were not the procuring cause, but the means, by which God, originally disposed to forgive, thought it right to bestow his pardon." Let then the word intercession be changed for sacrifice, and see whether the answer be not equally conclusive.

The sacrifice of Christ was never deemed by any who did not wish to calumniate the doctrine of atonement, to have made God placable, but merely viewed as the means, appointed by divine wisdom, by which to bestow forgiveness. And agreeably to this, do we not find this sacrifice every where spoken of, as ordained by God himself?—*God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life—and herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins†—and again we are told, that we are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish, and without spot—who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world‡—and again, that Christ is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.§ Since then, the notion of the efficiency of the sacrifice of Christ contained in the doctrine of atonement, stands precisely on the same foundation, with that of pure intercession—merely as the means, whereby God has thought fit to grant his favour and gracious aid to repentant sinners, and to fulfil that merciful intention, which he had at all times entertained towards his fallen creatures: and since, by the same sort of representation, the charge of implacability in the Divine Being, is as applicable to the one scheme, as to the other; that is, since it is a calumny most foully cast upon both: we may estimate, with what candour this has been made, by those who hold the one doctrine, the fundamental ground of their objec-

* John, iii. 16.

† 1 John, iv. 10.

‡ 1 Pet. i. 18, 19, 20.

§ Revel. xiii. 8.

tions against the other. For, on the ground of the expressions of God's unbounded love to his creatures every where through Scripture, and of his several declarations that he forgave them freely, it is, that they principally contend, that the notion of expiation by the sacrifice of Christ, can not be the genuine doctrine of the New Testament.^s

But still it is demanded, "in what way, can the death of Christ, considered as a sacrifice of expiation, be conceived to operate to the remission of sins, unless by the appeasing a Being, who otherwise would not have forgiven us?"—To this the answer of the Christian is, "I know not, nor does it concern me to know, in what manner the sacrifice of Christ is connected with the forgiveness of sins: it is enough, that this is declared by God to be the medium, through which my salvation is effected. I pretend not to dive into the councils of the Almighty. I submit to his wisdom: and I will not reject his grace, because his mode of vouchsafing it is not within my comprehension." But now let us try the doctrine of pure intercession by this same objection. It has been asked, how can the sufferings of one Being, be conceived to have any connexion with the forgiveness of another. Let us likewise enquire, how the meritorious obedience of one Being, can be conceived to have any connexion with the pardon of the transgressions of another:† or whether the prayers of a righteous Being in behalf of a wicked person, can be imagined to have more weight in obtaining forgiveness for the transgressor, than the same supplication, seconded by the offering up of life itself, to procure that forgiveness? The fact is, the want of discoverable connexion has nothing to do with either. Neither the sacrifice, nor the intercession, has, as far as we can comprehend, any efficacy whatever. All that we know, or can know of the one, or of the other, is, that it has been appointed as the means, by which God has determined to act with respect to man. So that to object to the one, because the mode of operation is unknown, is not only giving up the other, but the very notion of a Mediator; and if followed on, cannot fail to lead to pure Deism, and perhaps may not stop even there.

^s See No. XVIII

[†] See No. XIX.

Thus we have seen, to what the general objections against the doctrine of atonement amount. The charges of divine implacability, and of inefficacious means, we have found to bear with as little force against this, as against the doctrine, which is attempted to be substituted in its room.

We come now to the objections, which are drawn from the immediate language of Scripture, in those passages, in which the nature of our redemption is described. And first, it is asserted, that it is no where said in Scripture, that God is reconciled to us by Christ's Death, but that we are every where said to be reconciled to God.^y Now, in this objection, which clearly lays the whole stress upon our obedience, we discover the secret spring of this entire system, which is set up in opposition to the scheme of atonement: we see that reluctance to part with the proud feeling of merit, with which the principle of Redemption by the sacrifice of Christ, is openly at war: and consequently, we see the essential difference there is, between the two doctrines at present under consideration; and the necessity there exists, for separating them, by the clearest marks of distinction. But to return to the objection that has been made, it very fortunately happens, that we have the meaning of the words in their Scripture use, defined by no less an authority, than that of our Saviour himself—*If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath OUGHT AGAINST THEE, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way—first BE RECONCILED TO thy Brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Now from this plain instance, in which the person offending is expressly described, as the party to be reconciled to him who had been offended, by agreeing to his terms of accommodation, and thereby making his peace with him; it manifestly appears, in what sense, this expression is to be understood, in the language of the New Testament. The very words, then, produced for the purpose of shewing, that there was no displeasure on the part of God, which it was necessary by some means to avert, prove the direct contrary : and our being reconciled to God, evidently does not mean, our giving up our sins, and thereby laying aside our enmity ^w to God (in which sense the objection supposes it to be taken) but the turning away his displeasure, whereby we are enabled to regain his favour. And indeed it were strange, had it not meant this. What! are we to suppose the God of the Christian, like the Deity of the Epicurean, to look on with indifference, upon the actions of this life, and not to be offended at the Sinner? The displeasure of God, it is to be remembered, is not like man's displeasure, a resentment or passion, but a judicial disapprobation: which if we abstract from our notion of God, we must cease to view him as the moral governor of the world. And it is from the want of this distinction, which is so highly necessary; and the consequent fear of degrading the Deity, by attributing to him, what might appear to be the weakness of passion; that they, who trust to reason, more than to Scripture, have been withheld from admitting any principle, that implied displeasure on the part of God. Had they attended but a little to the plain language of Scripture, they might have rectified their mistake. They would there have found, the wrath of God against the disobedient, spoken of in almost every page.* They would have found also a case, which is exactly in point to the main argument

^y See No. XX.

* Matt. v.—23, 24.

^w See No. XXI.

* See No. XXII

before us ; in which there is described, not only the wrath of God, but the turning away of his displeasure by the mode of sacrifice. The case is that of the three friends of Job,—in which, God expressly says, that his *wrath is kindled against the friends of Job, because they had not spoken of him the thing that was right;—and at the same time directs them to offer up a sacrifice, as the way of averting his anger.[†]

But then it is urged, that God is every where spoken of, as a Being of infinite Love. True ; and the whole difficulty arises from building on partial Texts. When men perpetually talk of God's justice, as being necessarily modified by his goodness,[‡] they seem to forget, that it is no less the language of Scripture, and of reason, that his goodness should be modified by his justice. Our error on this subject proceeds from our own narrow views, which compel us to consider the attributes of the Supreme Being, as so many distinct qualities, when we should conceive of them as inseparably blended together ; and his whole nature as one great impulse to what is best.

As to God's displeasure against sinners, there can be then upon the whole no reasonable ground of doubt. And against the doctrine of atonement, no difficulty can arise, from the Scripture phrase, of men being reconciled to God : since, as we have seen, that directly implies, the turning away the displeasure of God, so as to be again restored to his favour, and protection.

* Job, xliii. 7. † See No. XXIII. ‡ See No. XXIV.

But, though all this must be admitted, by those who will not shut their eyes against reason, and scripture; yet still it is contended, that the death of Christ cannot be considered as a propitiatory sacrifice. Now, when we find him described, as *the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world; when we are told, that Christ hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God †; and that he needed not, like the High Priests under the law, to offer up sacrifice daily, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for that this he did once, when he offered up himself ‡; when he is expressly asserted to be the propitiation for our sins ||; and God is said to have loved us, and to have sent his son to be the propitiation^b for our sins §; when Isaiah ¶ describes his soul as made an offering for sin^c; when it is said that *God spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all; and that by him we have received the^d atonement †; when these, and many other such passages, are to be found; when every expression, referring to the death of Christ, evidently indicates the notion of a sacrifice of atonement and propitiation;

* Joh i. 29. † Ephes. v. 2. ‡ Hebr. vii. 27

|| 1 Joh. ii. 2. § 1 Joh. iv. 10. ¶ liii. 10.

* Rom. viii. 32. † Rom. v. 11.

^a See No. XXV.

^b See No. XXVI.

^c See No. XXVII.

^d See No. XXVIII.

when this sacrifice is particularly represented, as of the nature of a sin offering; which was a species of "sacrifice" prescribed to be offered upon the commission of an offence, after which the offending person was considered as if he had never sinned:"—it may well appear surprising, on what ground it can be questioned, that the death of Christ is pronounced in Scripture to have been a sacrifice of atonement and expiation, for the sins of men.

It is asserted, that the several passages, which seem to speak this language, contain nothing more than figurative allusions: that all that is intended is, that Christ laid down his life for, that is, on account of, mankind^f: and that there being circumstances of resemblance between this event and the sacrifices of the Law, terms were borrowed from the latter, to express the former, in a manner more lively and impressive. And as a proof that the application of these terms is but ^g figurative, it is contended, ^h 1st. That the death of Christ did not correspond literally, and exactly, to the ceremonies of the Mosaic Sacrifice: 2ndly. That being in different places, compared to different kinds of sacrifices, to all of which it could not possibly correspond, it cannot be considered as exactly of the nature of any: and lastly, that there was no such thing as a sacrifice of propitiation or expiation of sin, under the Mosaic dis-

^e See No. XXIX.

^f See No. XXX.

^g See No. XXXI.

^h See No. XXXII.

pensation at all; this notion having been entirely of Heathen origin.ⁱ

As to the two first arguments, they deserve but little consideration. The want of an exact similitude to the precise form of the Mosaic sacrifice, is but a slender objection. It might as well be said, that because Christ was not of the species of animal, which had usually been offered up; or because he was not slain in the same manner; or because he was not offered by the High Priest, there could have been no sacrifice.^k But this is manifest trifling. If the formal notion of a sacrifice for sin, that is, a life offered up in expiation, be adhered to, nothing more can be required to constitute it a sacrifice, except by those who mean to cavil, not to discover truth.

Again, as to the second argument, which from the comparison of Christ's death to the different kinds of sacrifices, would infer that it was not of the nature of any, it may be replied, that it will more reasonably follow, that it was of the nature of all. Resembling that of the ^l*Passover*, inasmuch as by it we were delivered, from an evil yet greater than that of Egyptian bondage; partaking the nature of the Sin offering, as being accepted in expiation of transgression; and similar to the institution of the Scape Goat, as bearing the accumulated sins of all: may we not reasonably suppose, that this one great sacrifice contained the full import and completion of the whole sacrificial system? And that so far from being spoken of in figure, as bearing some resemblance to the sacrifices of the Law, they were on the contrary, as the apostle expressly tells us, † but figures, or faint and partial representations, of this stupendous sacrifice, which had been ordained from the beginning? And besides, it is to be remarked in general, with respect to the figurative application of the sacrificial terms, to the death of Christ; that the striking resemblance between that and the sacrifices of the Law, which is assigned as the reason of such application, would have produced just the contrary effect, upon the sacred writers; since they must have been aware, that the constant use of such expressions, aided by the strength of the resemblance, must have laid a foundation for error, in that which constitutes the main doctrine of the Christian faith. Being addressed to a people, whose religion was entirely sacrificial, in what but the obvious and literal sense, could the sacrificial representations of the death of Christ, have been understood?

ⁱ See No. XXXIII. ^k See No. XXXIV. ^l See No. XXXV.

We come now to the third and principal objection, which is built upon the assertion, that no sacrifices of atonement (in the sense in which we apply this term to the death of Christ) had existence under the Mosaic Law: such as were called by that name, having had an entirely different import.^m Now that certain offerings

† Hebr. x. 1.

^m See No. XXXVI.

under this denomination, related to things, and were employed for the purpose of purification, so as to render them fit instruments of the ceremonial worship, must undoubtedly be admitted. That others were again appointed to relieve persons from ceremonial incapacities, so as to restore them to the privilege of joining in the services of the temple, is equally true. But that there were others of a nature strictly propitiatory, and ordained to avert the displeasure of God from the transgressor not only of the ceremonial, but, in some cases, even of the ⁿ moral law, will appear manifest upon a very slight examination. Thus we find it decreed, that if a soul sin and commit a trespass against the Lord, and lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered to him to keep—or have found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, and SWEARETH FALSELY, then, because he hath sinned in this, he shall not only make restitution to his neighbour—but he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the Lord, a ram without blemish out of the flock; and the Priest shall make an ATONEMENT for him before the Lord, and it shall be FORGIVEN HIM.† And again in a case of criminal connexion with a bond-maid who was betrothed, the offender is ordered to bring his trespass-offering, and the Priest is to make ATONEMENT for him with the trespass-offering, for the sin

ⁿ See No. XXXVII.

† Levit. vi. 2—7.

which he hath done ; and the sin which he hath done shall be FORGIVEN him.* And in the case of all offences which fell not under the description of presumptuous, it is manifest from the slightest inspection of the book of Leviticus, that the atonement prescribed was appointed as the means, whereby God might be propitiated, or reconciled to the offender.

Again, as to the vicarious^o import of the Mosaic sacrifice ; or in other words, its expressing an acknowledgment of what the sinner had deserved ; this not only seems directly set forth in the account of the first offering in Leviticus, where it is said of the person who brought a free-will offering, he shall lay his hand upon the head^p of the burnt-offering, and it shall be ACCEPTED FOR him, to make atonement for him † : but the ceremony of the Scape-Goat on the day of expiation appears to place this matter beyond doubt. On this head however, as not being necessary^q to my argument, I shall not at present enlarge.

That expiatory sacrifice (in the strict and proper sense of the word) was a part of the Mosaic institution, there remains then, I trust, no sufficient reason to deny. That it existed in like manner amongst the Arabians,^r in the time of

* Levit. xix. 20, 22.

^o See No. XXXVIII.

^p See No. XXXIX.

+ Levit. i. 4.

^q See No. XL.

^r See No. LIX.

Job, we have already seen. And that its universal prevalence in the Heathen world, though corrupted and disfigured by idolatrous practices, was the result of an original divine appointment, every candid enquirer will find little reason to doubt.^s But be this as it may, it must be admitted, that propitiatory sacrifices not only existed through the whole Gentile world, but had place under the law of Moses. The argument then, which from the non-existence of such sacrifices amongst the Jews, would deny the term when applied to the death of Christ to indicate such sacrifice, necessarily falls to the ground.^t

But, in fact, they who deny the sacrifice of Christ to be a real and proper sacrifice for sin, must, if they are consistent, deny that any such sacrifice ever did exist, by divine appointment. For on what principle, do they deny the former, but this?—that the sufferings and death of Christ, for the sins and salvation of men, can make no change in God: can not render him more ready to forgive, more benevolent, than he is in his own nature; and consequently can have no power to avert from the offender, the punishment of his transgression. Now, on the same principle, every sacrifice for the expiation of sin, must be impossible. And this explains the true cause, why these persons will not admit the language of the New Testament, clear and express as it is, to signify a real and proper sacrifice for sin: and why they feel it necessary, to explain away the equally clear and express description of that species of sacrifice in the Old. ^v Setting out with a preconceived erroneous notion of its nature, and one which involves a manifest contradiction; they hold themselves justified, in rejecting every acceptation of Scripture, which supports it. But, had they more accurately examined the true import of the term in Scripture use, they would have perceived no such contradiction, nor would they have found themselves compelled to refine away by strained and unnatural interpretations, the clear and obvious meaning of the sacred text. They would have seen, that a sacrifice for sin, in Scripture language implies solely this, “ a sacrifice wisely and graciously appointed by God, the moral governor of the world, to expiate the guilt of sin in such a manner, as to avert the punishment of it from the offender.”^w To ask why God should have appointed this particular mode, or in what way it can avert the punishment of sin; is to take us back to the general point at issue with the Deist, which has been already discussed. With the Christian, who admits redemption under any modification, such matters cannot be subject of enquiry.

^s See No. XLI. ^t See XII.

^v See No. XLIII.

^w See No. XLIV.

But even to our imperfect apprehension, some circumstances of natural connexion and fitness, may be pointed out. The whole may be considered, as a sensible and striking representation of a punishment, which the sinner was conscious he deserved, from God's justice: and then, on the part of God, it becomes a public declaration of his holy displeasure against sin, and of his merciful compassion for the sinner; and on the part of the offender, when offered by or for him, it implies a sincere confession of guilt, and a hearty desire of obtaining pardon: and upon the due performance of this service, the sinner is pardoned, and escapes the penalty of his transgression.

This we shall find agreeable to the nature of a sacrifice for sin, as laid down in the Old Testament. Now is there any thing in this, degrading to the honour of God; or in the smallest degree inconsistent with the dictates of natural reason? And in this view, what is there in the death of Christ, as a sacrifice for the sins of mankind, that may not in a certain degree, be embraced by our natural notions? For according to the explanation just given, is it not a declaration to the whole world, of the greatness of their sins; and of the proportionate mercy and compassion of God, who had ordained this method, whereby, in a manner consistent with his attributes, his fallen creatures might be again taken into his favour, on their making themselves parties in this great sacrifice: that is, on their complying with those conditions, which on the received notion of sacrifice, would render them parties in this; namely, an adequate conviction of guilt, a proportionate sense of God's love, and a firm determination, with an humble faith in the sufficiency of this sacrifice, to endeavour after a life of amendment and obedience? Thus much falls within the reach of our comprehension on this mysterious subject. Whether in the expanded range of God's moral government, some other end may not be held in view, in the death of his only begotten Son, it is not for us to enquire; nor does it in any degree concern us: what God has been pleased to reveal, it is alone our duty to believe.

One remarkable circumstance indeed there is, in which the sacrifice of Christ differs from all those sacrifices, which were offered under the law. Our blessed Lord was not only the Subject of the offering, but the Priest who offered it. Therefore he has become not only a sacrifice, but an intercessor; his intercession being founded upon this voluntary act of benevolence, by which he offered himself without spot to God. We are not only then in virtue of the sacrifice, forgiven; but in virtue of the intercession admitted to favour and grace. And thus the Scripture notion of the sacrifice of Christ, includes every advantage, which the advocates for the pure intercession, seek from their scheme of redemption. But it also contains others, which they necessarily lose by the rejection of that notion. It contains the great advantage^x of impressing mankind with a due sense of their guilt, by compelling a comparison with the immensity of the sacrifice made to redeem them from its effects. It contains that, in short, which is the soul and substance of all Christian virtue—HUMILITY. And the fact is plainly this, that in every attempt to get rid of the Scripture doctrine of atonement, we find feelings of a description, opposite to this Evangelic quality, more or less to prevail: we find a fondness for the opinion of man's own sufficiency, and an unwillingness to submit with devout and implicit reverence, to the sacred word of Revelation.

If now upon the whole it has appeared, that natural reason is unable to evince the efficacy of repentance: if it has appeared, that for the purpose of forgiveness, the idea of a Mediatorial scheme is perfectly consistent with our ordinary notions: if it has appeared, that Revelation has most unequivocally pronounced, that through the mediation of Jesus Christ, the son of God, our redemption has been effected: if it has appeared, that Christ is declared to have effected that redemption, by the sacrifice of himself for the sins of mankind: if it has appeared, that in the Scripture meaning of sacrifice for sin, is included atonement for transgression : and if it has appeared, that the expression has been applied to Christ, in the plain and literal sense of the word, as the propitiation of an offended God : I trust we are sufficiently fortified ; against the Deist, who denies the DIVINE MISSION ; against the Socinian, who denies the REDEEMING MEDIATION ; and against the modern rationalizing Arian, who denies the EXPIATORY SACRIFICE of Christ : in short, against all, who would deprive us of any part of the precious benefits, which on this day our Saviour died to procure for us : against all, who would rob us of that humble feeling of our own insufficiency, which alone can give us an ardent, and animating faith in the death and merits, of our blessed Redeemer.

^x See No. XLV.

DISCOURSE II.

HEBR. ix. 22.

And without Shedding of Blood is no Remission.

ON the last commemoration of the awful subject of this day's observance, it was attempted in this place, to clear the important doctrine of Redemption, from those difficulties, in which it had been artfully entangled, by the subtle speculations of the disputatious Deist, and of the philosophising Christian. The impotence of Reason to erect the degraded sinner to an assured hope of the sufficiency of repentance, pointed out to us the necessity of an express revelation, on this head: that revelation, in announcing the expedient of a Mediator, was seen to fall in with the analogies of the Providential economy: the Mediatorial scheme was shewn to have been accomplished, through the sacrifice of the only begotten Son of God; and this sacrifice, to have been effective to the expiation of the sins of the whole human race. What the peculiar nature, and true import of this sacrifice, are; and in what sense, the expiation effected by it, is strictly to be understood, it is my purpose on this day to enquire. And as, on the one hand, there is no article of Christian knowledge, of deeper concern; and, on the other, none that has been more studiously involved in obscurity; I trust, that you, my young Brethren, will not refuse your patient attention, whilst I endeavour to unfold to your apprehension, the genuine, because the Scripture, interpretation of that great sacrifice, whereby we are redeemed from the power of sin and have received the promise of an eternal inheritance.

In the mode of enquiry, which has been usually adopted on this subject, one prevailing error deserves to be noticed. The nature of sacrifice, as generally practised and understood, antecedent to the time of Christ, has been first examined; and from that, as a ground of explanation, the notion of Christ's sacrifice has been derived: whereas, in fact by this, all former sacrifices are to be interpreted; and in reference to it only, can they be understood. From an error so fundamental, it is not wonderful, that the greatest perplexities should have arisen, concerning the nature of sacrifice in general; and that they should ultimately fall, with cumulative confusion, on the nature of that particular sacrifice, to the investigation of which, fanciful and mistaken theories, had been assumed as guides. Thus, whilst some have presumptuously attributed, the early and universal practice of sacrifice, to an irrational and superstitious fear of an imagined sanguinary divinity; and have been led in defiance of the express language of Revelation, to reject and ridicule the notion of sacrifice, as originating only in the grossness of ^ysuperstition: others, not equally destitute of reverence for the sacred word, and consequently not treating this solemn Rite, with equal disrespect, have yet ascribed its origin to human ^zinvention; and have thereby been compelled, to account for the divine-institution of the Jewish Sacrifices, as a mere accommodation to prevailing practice; and consequently to admit, even the sacrifice of Christ itself, to have grown out of, and been adapted to, this creature of human excogitation.

Of this latter class, the theories, as might be expected, are various. In one, sacrifices are represented in the light of gifts^a, intended to sooth and appease the Supreme Being, in like manner as they are found to conciliate the favour of men: in another, they are considered as federal rites^b, a kind of eating and drinking with God, as it were at his table, and thereby implying the being restored to a state of friendship with him, by repentance and confession of sins; in a third, they are described as but symbolical actions, or a more expressive language, denoting the gratitude of the offerer, in such as are eucharistical; and in those that are expiatory, the acknowledgment of, and contrition for sin, strongly expressed by the death of the animal, representing that death, which the offerer confessed to be his own desert.^c

^y See No. XLVI. ^z See No. XLVII.

^a See No. XLVIII. ^b See No. XLIX.

To these different hypotheses, which in the order of their enumeration, claim respectively the names of Spencer, Sykes, and Warburton, it may generally be replied, that the fact of Abel's sacrifice seems inconsistent with them all: with the first, inasmuch as it must have been antecedent to those distinctions of property, on which alone experience of the effects^d of gifts upon men could have been founded: with the second, inasmuch as it took place several ages prior to that period, at which both the words of Scripture, and the opinions of the wisest commentators, have fixed the permission^e of animal food to man: with the third, inasmuch as the language, which Scripture expressly states to have been derived to our first parents from divine^f instruction, cannot be supposed so defective, in those terms that related to the worship of God, as to have rendered it necessary for Abel, to call in the aid of actions, to express the sentiment of gratitude or sorrow; and still less likely is it, that he would have resorted to that species of action, which in the eye of reason must have appeared displeasing to God, the slaughter of an unoffending animal^g.

^c See No. I.

^d See No. II.

^e See No. LII.

^f See No. LIII.

^g See No. LIV.

To urge these topics of objection in their full force, against the several theories I have mentioned, would lead to a discussion, far exceeding the due limits of a discourse from this place. I therefore dismiss them for the present. Nor shall I, in refutation of the general idea of the human invention of sacrifice, enlarge upon the universality^h of the practice; the *sameness*ⁱ of the notion of its efficacy, pervading nations and ages the most remote; and the unreasonableness of supposing any natural connexion between the slaying of an animal, and the receiving pardon for the violation of God's laws,—all of which appear decisive against that idea. But, as both the general idea and the particular theories which have endeavoured to reconcile to it the nature and origin of sacrifice, have been caused by a departure from the true and only source of knowledge; let us return to that sacred fountain, and whilst we endeavour to establish the genuine Scripture notion of sacrifice, at the same time provide the best refutation of every other.

It requires but little acquaintance with Scripture to know, that the lesson, which it every where inculcates, is, that man by disobedience had fallen under the displeasure of his Maker; that to be reconciled to his favour, and restored to the means of acceptable obedience, a Redeemer was appointed; and that this Redeemer

^h See No. LV.

ⁱ See No. LVI.

laid down his life, to procure for repentant sinners forgiveness and acceptance. This surrender of life, has been called by the sacred writers, a sacrifice; and the end attained by it, expiation or atonement. With such, as have been desirous to reduce Christianity to a mere moral system, it has been a favourite object, to represent this sacrifice as entirely figurative, ^k founded only in allusion and similitude to the sacrifices of the law; whereas, that this is spoken of by the sacred writers, as a real and proper sacrifice, to which those under the law bore respect but as types or shadows, is evident from various passages of holy writ, but more particularly from the epistle to the Hebrews; in which it is expressly said, that *the law, having a shadow of good things to come, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect:—but this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God. And again, when the writer of this epistle, speaks of the High Priest entering into the Holy of Holies with the blood of the sacrifice, he asserts, that this was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect; but Christ being come, an High Priest of good things to come; not by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us; for, he adds, if the blood of bulls and of goats sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?† It must be unnecessary to detail more of the numerous passages, which go to prove, that the sacrifice of Christ was a true and effective sacrifice, whilst those of the law, were but faint representations, and inadequate copies, intended for its introduction.

^k See Nos. XXXI. and XLIV. * Hebr. x. 1. 12.

Now, if the sacrifices of the Law, appear to have been but preparations for this one great sacrifice, we are naturally led to consider, whether the same may not be asserted of sacrifice from the beginning; and whether we are not warranted by Scripture, in pronouncing the entire rite to have been ordained by God, as a type of that ONE SACRIFICE, in which all others were to have their consummation.

That the institution was of divine¹ ordinance, may, in the first instance, be reasonably inferred from the strong and sensible attestation of the divine acceptance of sacrifice in the case of^m

† Hebr. ix. 9—14.

¹ See No. LVII.

^m See No. LVIII.

Abel, again in that of Noah, afterwards in that of Abraham, and also from the systematic establishment of it, by the same divine authority, in the dispensation of Moses. And whether we consider the Book ofⁿ Job, as the production of Moses; or of that pious worshipper of the true God, among the descendants of Abraham, whose name it bears; or of some other person who lived a short time after, and composed it from the materials left by Job himself; the representation there made of God, as prescribing sacrifice to the friends of Job, in every supposition exhibits a strong authority, and of high antiquity, upon this question.

These few facts, which I have stated, unaided by any comment, and abstracting altogether from the arguments which embarrass the contrary hypothesis, and to which I have already alluded, might perhaps be sufficient to satisfy an enquiring and candid mind, that sacrifice must have had its origin in DIVINE INSTITUTION. But if in addition, this rite, as practised in the earliest ages, shall be found connected with the sacrifice of Christ, confessedly of divine appointment; little doubt can reasonably remain on this head. Let us then examine, more particularly, the circumstances of the first sacrifice, offered up by Abel.

ⁿ See No. LIX.

It is clear from the words of Scripture, that both Cain and Abel made oblations to the Lord. It is clear also, notwithstanding the well known fanciful interpretation of an eminent commentator,^o that Abel's was an animal sacrifice. It is no less clear, that Abel's was accepted, whilst that of Cain was rejected. Now what could have occasioned the distinction?—The acknowledgment of the Supreme Being and of his universal dominion, was no less strong in the offering of the fruits of the earth by Cain, than in that of the firstlings of the flock by Abel: the intrinsic efficacy of the gift must have been the same in each, each giving of the best that he possessed: the expression of gratitude, equally significant and forcible in both. How then is the difference^p to be explained? If we look to the writer to the Hebrews, he informs us, that the ground on which Abel's oblation was preferred to that of Cain, was, that Abel offered his in faith; and the criterion of this faith also appears to have been, in the opinion of this writer, the animal sacrifice. The words are remarkable—By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts[†]. The words here translated, a more excellent sacrifice, are in an early version rendered a much more sacrifice,^q which phrase, though

^o See No. LX.

^p See No. LXI.

[†] Hebr. xi. 4.

^q See No. LXII.

uncouth in form, adequately conveys the original. The meaning then is, that by faith Abel offered that, which was much more of the true nature of sacrifice, than what had been offered by Cain. Abel consequently was directed by faith, and this faith was manifested in the nature of his offering. What then are we to infer?—Without some revelation ^r granted, some assurance held out as the object of faith, Abel could not have exercised this virtue: and without some peculiar mode of sacrifice enjoined, he could not have exemplified his faith by an appropriate offering. The offering made, we have already seen, was that of an animal. Let us consider, whether this could have a connexion with any divine assurance, communicated at that early day.

It is obvious, that the promise made to our first parents, conveyed an intimation of some future deliverer, who should overcome the tempter that had drawn man from his innocence, and remove those evils which had been occasioned by the fall. This assurance, without which, or some other ground of hope, it seems difficult to conceive how the principle of religion could have had place among men, became to our first parents the grand object of faith. To perpetuate this fundamental article of religious belief among the descendants of Adam, some striking memorial of the fall of man, and of the promised deliverance,

^r See No. LXIII.

would naturally be appointed.^s And if we admit, that the scheme of Redemption by the death of the only begotten Son of God, was determined from the beginning; that is, if we admit, that when God had ordained the deliverance of man, he had ordained the means: if we admit, that Christ was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; what memorial could be devised more apposite, than that of animal sacrifice?—exemplifying, by the slaying of the victim, the death which had been denounced against man's disobedience:—thus exhibiting the awful lesson of that death which was the wages of Sin, and at the same time representing that death which was actually to be undergone by the Redeemer of mankind:—and hereby connecting in one view, the two great cardinal events in the history of man, the FALL, and the RECOVERY: the death denounced against Sin, and the death appointed for that Holy One, who was to lay down his life, to deliver man from the consequences of sin. The institution of animal sacrifice seems then to have been peculiarly significant, as containing all the elements of religious knowledge: and the adoption of this rite, with sincere and pious feelings, would at the same time imply an humble sense of the unworthiness of the offerer; a confession that death, which was inflicted on the victim, was the desert of those sins which had arisen from man's transgression; and a full reliance upon the promises of deliverance, joined to an acquiescence in the means appointed for its accomplishment.

^s See No. LXIV.

If this view of the matter be just, there is nothing improbable even in the supposition, that that part of the signification of the rite, which related to the sacrifice of Christ, might have been in some degree made known from the beginning. But not to contend for this, (scripture having furnished no express foundation for the assumption,) room for the exercise of faith is equally preserved, on the idea, that animal sacrifice was enjoined in the general as the religious sign of faith in the promise of Redemption, without any intimation of the way in which it became a sign. Agreeably to these principles, we shall find but little difficulty in determining, on what ground it was, that Abel's offering was accepted, whilst that of Cain was rejected. Abel, in firm reliance on the promise of God, and in obedience to his command, offered that sacrifice, which had been enjoined as the religious expression of his faith; whilst Cain, disregarding the gracious assurances that had been vouchsafed, or at least disdaining to adopt the prescribed mode of manifesting his belief, possibly as not appearing to his reason to possess any efficacy or natural fitness, thought he had sufficiently acquitted himself of his duty, in acknowledging the general superintendance of God, and expressing his gratitude to the Supreme Benefactor, by presenting some of those good things, which he thereby confessed to have been derived from his bounty. In short, Cain, the first born of the fall, exhibits the first fruits of his Parents' disobedience, in the arrogance and self-sufficiency of reason rejecting the aids of Revelation, because they fell not within its apprehension of right. He takes the first place in the annals of Deism, and displays, in his proud rejection of the ordinance of sacrifice, the same spirit, which, in later days, has actuated his enlightened followers, in rejecting the sacrifice of Christ.

This view of the subject receives strength, from the terms of expostulation, in which God addresses Cain, on his expressing resentment at the rejection of his offering, and the acceptance of Abel's. The words in the present version are, *if thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?—and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door—which words, as they stand connected in the context, supply no very satisfactory meaning, and have long served to exercise the ingenuity of Commentators to but little purpose. But if the word, which is here translated SIN, be rendered, as we find it in a great variety of passages in the Old Testament, a SIN OFFERING, the reading of the passage then becomes, if thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, a sin offering lieth even at the door^t. The connexion is thus rendered evident. God rebukes Cain, for not conforming to that species of sacrifice, which had been offered by Abel. He refers to it, as a matter of known injunction; and hereby points out the ground of distinction, in his treatment of him and his brother: and thus, in direct terms, enforces the observance of animal sacrifice.

* Gen. iv. 7.

As that part of my general position, which pronounces sacrifice to have been of divine institution, receives support from the passage just recited; so, to that part of it, which maintains, that this rite bore an aspect to the sacrifice of Christ, additional evidence may be derived from the language of the writer to the Hebrews, inasmuch as he places the blood of Abel's sacrifice in direct comparison with the blood of Christ, which he stiles pre-eminently the blood of sprinkling[†]: and represents both, as speaking good things, in different degrees^v. What then is the result of the foregoing reflexions?—The sacrifice of Abel, was an animal sacrifice. This sacrifice was accepted. The ground of this acceptance was the faith, in which it was offered. Scripture assigns no other object of this faith, but the promise of a Redeemer: and of this faith, the offering of an animal in sacrifice, appears to have been the legitimate, and consequently the instituted, expression. The institution of animal sacrifice then, was coeval with the fall, and had a reference to the sacrifice of our redemption. But as it had also an immediate, and most apposite, application to that important event in the condition of man, which, as being the occasion of, was essentially connected with, the work of redemption, that likewise we have reason to think was included in its signification. And thus, upon the whole, SACRIFICE appears to have been ordained, as a standing memorial of the death introduced by sin, and of that death which was to be suffered by the Redeemer.

^t See No. LXV.

[†] Hebr. xii. 24.

^v See No. LXVI.

We accordingly find this institution of animal sacrifice continue, until the giving of the law. No other offering than that of an animal, being recorded in Scripture down to this period,^w except in the case of Cain, and that we have seen was rejected. The sacrifices of Noah and of Abraham are stated to have been burnt-offerings. Of the same kind also were the sin-offerings presented by Job, he being said to have offered burnt-offerings according to the number of his sons, lest some of them *might have sinned in their hearts. But when we come to the promulgation of the law, we find the connexion between animal sacrifice and atonement, or reconciliation with God, clearly and distinctly announced. It is here declared, that sacrifices for sin should, on conforming to certain prescribed modes of oblation, be accepted as the means of deliverance from the penal consequences of transgression. And with respect to the peculiar efficacy of animal sacrifice, we find this remarkable declaration,—the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make atonement for the Soul † : in reference to which words, the sacred writer, from whom I have taken the subject of this day's discourse, formally pronounces, that without shedding of blood there is no remission. Now in what conceivable light can we view this institution, but in relation to that great sacrifice, which was to make atonement for sins : to that blood of sprinkling, which was to speak better things than that of Abel §, or that of the law ? The law itself is said to have had respect solely unto him. To what else can the principal institution of the law refer ?—an institution too, which unless so referred appears utterly unmeaning. The offering up an animal cannot be imagined to have had any intrinsic efficacy in procuring pardon for the transgression of the offerer. The blood of bulls and of goats could have possessed no virtue, whereby to cleanse him from his offences. Still less intelligible is the application of the blood of the victim, to the purifying of the parts of the tabernacle, and the apparatus of the ceremonial worship. All this can clearly have had no other than an instituted meaning ; and can be understood, only as in reference to some blood-shedding, which in an eminent degree possessed the power of purifying from pollution. In short, admit the sacrifice of Christ to be held in view in the institutions of the law, and every part is plain and intelligible; reject that notion, and every theory devised by the ingenuity of man, to explain the nature of the ceremonial worship, becomes trifling and inconsistent.

^w See No. LXVII.

* Job, i. 5.

† Lev. xvii. 11.

§ Heb. xii. 24.

Granting then the case of the Mosaic sacrifice, and that of Abel's, to be the same; neither of them in itself efficacious; both instituted by God; and both instituted in reference to that true and efficient sacrifice, which was one day to be offered: the rite, as practised before the time of Christ, may justly be considered as a SACRAMENTAL MEMORIAL, shewing forth the Lord's death until he came *; and when accompanied with a due faith in the promises made to the early believers, may reasonably be judged to have been equally acceptable with that sacramental memorial, which has been enjoined by our Lord himself to his followers, for the shewing forth his death until his coming again. And it deserves to be noticed, that this very analogy seems to be intimated by our Lord, in the language used by him at the institution of that solemn Christian rite. For in speaking of his own blood, he calls it, in direct reference to the blood wherewith Moses established and sanctified the first covenant, the blood of the NEW covenant, which was shed for the remission of sins † : thus plainly marking out the similitude, in the nature and objects of the two covenants, at the moment that he was prescribing the great sacramental commemoration of his own sacrifice.

* 1 Cor. xi. 26.

From this view of the subject, the history of Scripture sacrifice becomes consistent throughout. The sacrifice of Abel, and the Patriarchal sacrifices down to the giving of the law, record and exemplify those momentous events in the history of man,—the death incurred by sin, and that inflicted on our Redeemer. When length of time, and mistaken notions of religion leading to idolatry and every perversion of the religious principle, had so far clouded and obscured this expressive act of primeval worship, that it had ceased to be considered by the nations of the world, in that reference, in which its true value consisted : when the mere rite remained, without any remembrance of the promises, and consequently unaccompanied by that faith in their fulfilment, which was to render it an acceptable service : when the nations, deifying every passion of the human heart, and erecting altars to every vice, poured forth the blood of the victim, but to deprecate the wrath, or satiate the vengeance of each offended deity : when with the recollection of the true God, all knowledge of the true worship, was effaced from the minds of men: and when joined to the absurdity of the sacrificial rites, their cruelty, devoting to the malignity of innumerable sanguinary gods endless multitudes of human victims, demanded the divine interference; then, we see a people peculiarly selected, to whom, by express revelation, the knowledge of the one God is restored, and the species of worship ordained by him from the beginning, particularly enjoined. The principal part of the Jewish service, we accordingly find to consist of sacrifice; to which the virtue of expiation and atonement is expressly annexed: and in the manner of it, the particulars appear so minutely set forth, that when the object of the whole law should be brought to light, no doubt could remain as to its intended application. The Jewish sacrifices therefore seem to have been designed, as those from the beginning had been, to prefigure that one, which was to make atonement for all mankind. And as in this, all were to receive their consummation, so with this, they all conclude: and the institution closes with the completion of its object. But, as the gross perversions, which had pervaded the Gentile world, had reached likewise to the chosen people; and as the temptations to idolatry, which surrounded them on all sides, were so powerful as perpetually to endanger their adherence to the God of their fathers, we find the ceremonial service adapted to their carnal habits. And since the law itself, with its accompanying sanctions, seems to have been principally temporal; so the worship it enjoins, is found to have been for the most part, rather a public and solemn declaration of allegiance to the true God in opposition to the Gentile idolatries, than a pure and spiritual obedience in moral and religious matters, which was reserved for that more perfect system, appointed to succeed in due time, when the state of mankind would permit.

† Matt. xxvi. 28.

That the sacrifices of the law should therefore have chiefly operated to the cleansing from external impurities, and to the rendering persons or things fit to approach God in the exercises of the ceremonial worship; whilst at the same time they were designed to prefigure the sacrifice of Christ, which was purely spiritual and possessed the transcendent virtue of atoning for all moral pollution, involves in it no inconsistency whatever, since in this the true proportion of the entire dispensations is preserved. And to this point, it is particularly necessary, that our attention should be directed, in the examination of the present subject; as upon the apparent disproportion in the objects and effects of sacrifice in the Mosaic and Christian schemes, the principal objections against their intended correspondence have been founded*.

The sacrifices of the law then being preparatory to that of Christ; the law itself being but a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; the sacred writers in the New Testament, naturally adopt the sacrificial terms of the ceremonial service, and by their reference to the use of them as employed under the law, clearly point out the sense, in which they are to be understood, in their application under the gospel. In examining, then, the meaning of such terms, when they occur in the New Testament, we are clearly directed to the explanation that is circumstantially given of them in the Old. Thus, when we find the virtue of atonement attributed to the sacrifice of Christ, in like manner as it had been to those under the law; by attending to the representation so minutely given of it in the latter, we are enabled to comprehend its true import in the former^y.

* See No. LXVIII.

Of the several sacrifices under the law, that one which seems most exactly to illustrate the sacrifice of Christ, and which is expressly compared with it by the writer to the Hebrews, is that which was offered for the whole assembly on the solemn anniversary of expiation^z. The circumstances of this ceremony, whereby atonement was to be made for the sins of the whole Jewish people, seem so strikingly significant, that they deserve a particular detail. On the day appointed for this general expiation, the Priest is commanded to offer a bullock and a goat, as sin-offerings, the one for himself, and the other for the people: and having sprinkled the blood of these in due form before the mercy-seat, to lead forth a second goat, denominated the scape-goat; and after laying both his hands upon the head of the scape-goat, and confessing over him all the iniquities of the people, to put them upon the head of the goat, and to send the animal, thus bearing the sins of the people, away into the wilderness: in this manner expressing by an action, which cannot be misunderstood, that the atonement, which it is directly affirmed was to be effected by the sacrifice of the sin-offering, consisted in removing from the people their iniquities by this symbolical translation to the animal. For it is to be remarked, that the ceremony of the scape-goat, is not a distinct one: it is a continuation of the process, and is evidently the concluding part, and symbolical consummation of the sin-offering^a. So that the transfer of the iniquities of the people upon the head of the scape-goat, and the bearing them away to the wilderness, manifestly imply, that the atonement effected by the sacrifice of the sin-offering, consisted in the transfer and consequent removal of those iniquities. What then are we taught to infer from this ceremony?—That as the atonement under the law, or expiation of the legal transgressions, was represented as a translation of those transgressions, in the act of sacrifice in which the animal was slain,

^y See No. LXIX.

^z See No. LXX.

^a See No. LXXI.

and the people thereby cleansed from their legal impurities, and released from the penalties which had been incurred; so, the great atonement for the sins of mankind, was to be effected by the sacrifice of Christ, undergoing for the restoration of men to the favour of God, that death, which had been denounced against sin; and which he suffered in like manner as if the sins of men had been actually transferred to him, as those of the congregation had been symbolically transferred to the sin-offering of the people.

That this is the true meaning of the atonement effected by Christ's sacrifice, receives the fullest confirmation from every part of both the Old and the New Testament: and that thus far, the death of Christ is vicarious, cannot be denied without a total disregard of the sacred writings.

It has indeed been asserted, by those who oppose the doctrine of atonement as thus explained, that nothing vicarious appears in the Mosaic sacrifices.^b With what justice this assertion has been made, may be judged from the instance of the sin-offering that has been adduced. The transfer to the animal of the iniquities of the people, (which must necessarily mean the transfer of their penal effects, or the subjecting the animal to suffer on account of those iniquities)—this accompanied with the death of the victim; and the consequence of the whole being the removal of the punishment of those iniquities from the offerers, and the ablution of all legal offensiveness in the sight of God:—thus much of the nature of vicarious, the language of the Old Testament justifies us in attaching to the notion of atonement. Less than this we are clearly not at liberty to attach to it. And what the law thus sets forth as its express meaning, directly determines that which we must attribute to the great atonement of which the Mosaic ceremony was but a Type: always remembering, carefully to distinguish between the figure, and the substance; duly adjusting their relative value and extent; estimating the efficacy of the one, as real, intrinsic, and universal; whilst that of the other is to be viewed as limited, derived, and emblematic^c.

^b See No. LXXII.

It must be confessed, that to the principles on which the doctrine of the Christian atonement has been explained in this, and a former discourse, several objections, in addition to those already noticed, have been advanced.^d These however cannot now be examined in this place. The most important have been discussed; and as for such as remain, I trust that to a candid mind, the general view of the subject which has been given, will prove sufficient for their refutation.

One word more, my young Brethren, and I have done.—On this day we have assembled to commemorate the stupendous sacrifice of himself, offered up by our blessed Lord for our redemption from the bondage and wages of sin : and on next Sunday, we are invited to participate of that solemn rite which he hath ordained for the purpose of making us partakers in the benefit of that sacrifice. Allow me to remind you, that this is an awful call, and upon an awful occasion. Let him who either refuses to obey this call, or presumes to attend upon it irreverently, beware what his condition is. The man who can be guilty of either deliberately, is not safe.

^c See No. LXXIII.

^d See No. LXXIV.

Consider seriously what has been said, and may the God of Peace, that brought again from the dead, our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the Sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever—Amen.

ILLUSTRATIONS

AND

EXPLANATORY DISSERTATIONS.

ILLUSTRATIONS

AND

EXPLANATORY DISSERTATIONS.

NO. I.—ON THE PRE-EXISTENCE OF CHRIST, AND THE SPECIES OF ARGUMENTS BY WHICH THIS ARTICLE OF THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE HAS BEEN OPPOSED.

PAGE 2. ΕΚΕΝΩΣΕΝ ΕΑΥΤΟΥ—strictly, emptied himself—viz. of that form of God—that Glory which he had with God before the world was—see Phil. ii. 6, 7, compared with John xvii. 5.—see also Krebs. Observ. Flav. p. 329. Fortuita Sacra, p. 217—219. Elsner Obs. Sac. ii. p. 240—245. See also Schleusner, on the word ΕΚΕΝΩΣΕΝ. On the whole of the passage from Philippians, I would particularly recommend the observations of the Bishop of Lincoln, Elements, &c. vol. ii. p. 111—115. Middleton likewise (Doctrine of the Greek Article, p. 537—539.) deserves to be consulted.

It has indeed been pronounced, in a late extraordinary publication, distinguished at least as much by strength of assertion as by force of argument, that "a person, who has not paid particular attention to the subject, would be surprised to find, how very few texts there are which even seem, directly to assert, the PRE-EXISTENCE OF CHRIST."—How this matter may appear to those who have "not paid particular attention to the subject," I leave to the author of this work to determine. With those, who have, it is unnecessary to say, what must be the reception of an observation so directly opposed, not more to the plain and uniform language of Scripture, than to every conclusion of a just and rational criticism applied to the sacred text. Bold however as this writer appears in assertion, he seems by no means deficient in prudence; for whilst he affirms, that even those few texts, (as he chuses to represent them,) furnish no real support, to the doctrine they are adduced to confirm; he has on this, as on almost every other position throughout his book affecting the interpretation of Scripture, declined exposing his proof to hazard. We are referred, indeed, to "the Commentary of Grotius, Dr. Lardner's Letter on the Logos, Mr. Lindsey's Apology for resigning the vicarage of Catterick, and the Sequel to that apology, Hopton Haynes on the attributes of God, and Dr. Priestley's history of early opinions." These, we are told, will completely overturn the unscriptural notion, of the pre-existence of Christ. And this they are to accomplish, by shewing, that all such passages, as contribute to its support, “are either interpolated, corrupted, or misunderstood”—(see Mr. Thomas Belsham's Review of Mr. Wilberforce's treatise, pp. 272, 273.) Entrenched behind this oddly marshalled phalanx, this gentleman feels perfectly secure. It seems indeed somewhat strange, that, encouraged by such powerful aid, he has not thought fit, to offer a single text, in support of his own opinion; nor a confutation of any one of those, which have been urged by his adversaries in defence of theirs.

In the face however of this polemic array, and in defiance of those extraordinary powers of modifying Scripture which we find here ascribed to it, I have not hesitated to cite the passages referred to in the beginning of this Number. And when we find the great person who is there spoken of, described repeatedly, as having come down from Heaven, as from a place of settled abode previous to his appearance among men, (see John iii. 13. 31. vi. 38. 62. xiii. 3. xvi. 28, &c.): when we find him declared by St. Paul (1 Cor. xv. 47.) to be the Lord from Heaven: and again (Phil. ii. 6, 7, 8.) to have been in the form of God, yet to have taken upon him the form of a servant, and to have been made in the likeness of man: when again we find him represented (Hebr. i. 2, 3.) as that Being, by whom God made the worlds; and as the brightness of his glory: which GLORY, as has been already noticed, he had with God before the world was: and when again we are told (Coloss. i. 15, 16.) that he is the image of the invisible God; and that by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth: when these, and numerous other passages of the same import, are to be met in the Evangelic and Apostolic writings, and the whole tenor of Scripture is found perfectly corresponding; I own, I can not feel this essential article of the Christian faith much endangered, either from the confidence of this writer's assertions, or from the force of those arguments, under whose mighty shade he is content triumphantly to repose.

Lest however curiosity may have been excited with respect to those αναποδεικτοι συλλογισμοι, which Mr. B. and his friends, profess to have at their command; I subjoin the following specimen.—The passage in Heb. i. 2. which directly assigns the work of CREATION to Christ, will be admitted to be one of those, that “seem to assert his pre-existence.” In what manner is this fallacious semblance to be removed?—Δι' ε και της αιωνας εποισησεν, Grotius translates, FOR whom he made the worlds: and thus gives to the word δια, a signification, which not only has no parallel in the entire of the New Testament, but is in direct opposition to the established rule of all Grammarians: δια, with a genitive case commonly signifying the means by which; but never implying the final cause, unless when joined with the accusative. See *Phavorinus, Scapula, Stephanus, Hoogeveen in Viger. Glassius, &c. See also, on the application of the word in the New Testament, Sykes on Redemption, pp. 196. 221. 241.—but particularly Schleusner's enumeration of its various senses†, which seems to be quite decisive on the point. The solitary instance which Grotius has been able to discover in defence of his translation of the word δια, is to be found in Rom. vi. 4; in which it is manifest that his criticism cannot be maintained. Schleusner so pronounces upon it in the most peremptory terms.

Whilst Grotius thus violates the rules and analogy of the language, in one part of the sentence, later Socinians,‡ finding this mode of dis-

* Δια, προδεσις. οτε μεν συντασσεται γενικη, δηλοι μεριτειαυ. οιογ, δια σθ εποιησα τοδε, μεριτευοντος σθ δηλονοτι. οτε δε αιτιατικη, αιτιαυ. οιογ, δια σε εποιησα τοδε. Phavor. p. 480.

† Amongst the multiplied texts which Schleusner has collected, the only one, which seems to him not to coincide in the general result, is from 2 Pet. i. 3. But this is manifestly a mistake, as may be clearly seen on consulting Rosenmuller, Newcome, and indeed almost every commentator, upon the passage. It is to be noted also, that under the head of δια coupled with the genitive, the 20th sense ascribed by Schleusner, bears no reference to the final cause, though the Latin term which he makes use of, may at first sight seem to imply it.

‡ I do not mean by this expression to intimate, that Grotius is, strictly speaking, to be ranked among the followers of Socinus. I am aware that this charge advanced against him by the author of L'Esprit de M. Arnauld has been refuted torting the sense indefensible, have betaken themselves to another, where they have exercised an equal violence on the original.—Τῆς αἰωνίας, which elsewhere in this very Epistle (xi. 3.) is allowed to mean the material world; and which is always used plurally by the Jews, as implying the inferior and superior worlds; and in its connexion here, exactly corresponds with the things in Heaven, and the things in Earth (Col. i. 16); and upon the whole clearly means the physical world, or *the Heavens and the Earth; is yet strained by the Socinians, to imply the Evangelical dispensation: so that the entire passage is made to signify, merely, that by Christ's ministry, there should be, as it were, a new creation; that is, a new church begun upon earth. Now it deserves to be considered, on what principle of just interpretation, such a translation can be adopted. It is true, that Christ, in some of the Greek versions of Isai. ix. 6. has been stiled, πατηρ τε μελλοντος αιωνος. But, admitting the word here to imply a dispensation that was to come, does it follow that this one dispensation is to be expressed by the plural word αιωνας? To force upon it this meaning, is again to do violence to grammar and usage. And yet this is done, because the plural interpretation, by whom he constituted the AGES or DISPENSATIONS, lets in the obnoxious idea of pre-existence, as completely as the sense of a material creation can do.

(see Bayle's Dict. Vol. V. pp. 581, 582.) And his single treatise, De Satisfactione Christi contra Faustum Socinum, might be judged sufficient to redeem him from the appellation. But his exposition of most of the passages of Scripture relating to the divinity of Christ, is so clearly favourable to the main principle of the Socinian scheme, that with some latitude the term Socinian is not unfairly applicable.—Dr. Lardner, in his Letter on the Logos, (vol. xi. p. 112: Kippis's Edition of his Works) written expressly for the purpose of establishing the proper humanity of Christ, affirms, that “Grotius explains texts better than the professed Socinians.”—Whether Lardner, then, viewed him as far removed from the pale of the Fratres Poloni, is surely not difficult to decide.

* See Whitby and Rosenmuller, in loc. and Col. i. 16. likewise Peirce and Hallet:—also Krebs. Observ. on Col. i. 17.

It may be worth while to enquire, in what way Mr. Lindsey has treated this subject, in an Essay written by him, in the 2nd. vol. of the Theological Repository, entitled “Brief Remarks concerning the two creations;” the express object of which is to shew, that none but a moral or spiritual creation was to be ascribed to Christ. He never once notices this passage of Hebrews; but directs his attention almost entirely, to the text in Colossians, and to that in Ephes. iii. 9. And this is the more remarkable, as he refers to a passage to the same purport, in the very same chap. of Hebrews. The reason of this however, it may not be difficult to discover, when it is considered, that in the passages which he has examined, though manifestly repugnant to his conclusion, there was not to be found so brief and stubborn an expression, as ΤΕΣ ΑΙΩΝΑΣ ΕΤΟΙΜΗΤΕΝ. As to the arguments derived by him, from the passages which he has thought proper to notice, they do not seem entitled to very minute attention: they amount merely to a note of Mr. Locke on the one; and an assertion, on the other, that the natural creation cannot have been intended, “because this is uniformly spoken of, throughout the Bible, as effected by the immediate power of God, without the interposition of any other being whatever.”

Thus Mr. Belsham’s assertion, that Mr. Lindsey would overturn the notion of the pre-existence of Christ, is maintained by Mr. Lindsey’s own assertion that he has done so. He admits indeed, that his argument is not likely to “have any effect upon those who are Tritheists, or Orthodox in the vulgar and strict sense; who can with the same breath, and in the same sentence, without being astonished at themselves, assert, that there are three Creators and yet but one Creator. There is no arguing (he adds) with men that can swallow, without feeling, downright contradictions.” Mr. Belsham in his engagement, that the champions of his tenets, would be able fully to establish them, by proving, that all such passages of Scripture as contradicted them, were “either interpolated, corrupted or misunderstood," forgot to make the exception, which is here very properly introduced by Mr. Lindsey:— for sound argument must surely be lost upon such men as the above.

But let us examine farther, in what way the parallel passages in Colos. i. 16. and Ephes. iii. 9. which by attributing the work of creation to Christ, seem to intimate his pre-existence, are explained by other writers, who are fellow-labourers with Mr. Belsham, in the laudable work of reducing the exalted dignity of our blessed Saviour to the common standard of human nature. It is true, says Mr. Tyrwhitt (Commentaries and Essays, vol. 2.) that it is said (Ephes. iii. 9.) that God created all things by Jesus Christ. But these words are thus to be interpreted:—things must be taken for persons, because there are passages where the word is so understood:—by things that are, must be intended persons peculiarly chosen by God, as the Jews were, in opposition to the Gentiles, who are described as things that are not. But as we now speak of the Christian dispensation, by all things must be understood, all persons, whether Jews or Gentiles, who believe in the Gospel: and by the word created, is meant to be conveyed, “not the giving being, or bringing into existence; but the conferring benefits and privileges, or the placing in a new and more advantageous state of being.”—And thus these few slight and obvious transitions being admitted, Mr. Tyrwhitt easily explains the creation of all things by Jesus Christ, to be, the bestowing upon all persons who would accept them, the privileges of the Gospel, by the ministry of Christ.

Again, on Col. i. 16, we are informed by the German divines, Ernestus and Teller, in a similar felicity of interpretation, that when it is said, that by Christ were all things created, that are in Heaven, and that are in earth; visible and invisible, &c. it is meant to express by an EASY FIGURE, *a new moral creation wrought in the world by the gospel of Christ:—the things that are in Heaven, and that are in earth, meaning the Jews and Pagans:—and the things visible and invisible; the present and future generations of men!!! See Rosenmuller's Scholia—on Col. i. 16. **

To remind these writers, that St. John has placed this matter beyond dispute, in his first chapter, by declaring, that the world which was made by Christ, was a world which yet knew him not, and therefore could not have been the work of a spiritual creation, the very nature of which was to bestow the true knowledge of Christ and his Gospel: to remind them, I say, of this, and

* What says the learned dissenter Mr. Peirce upon such treatment of this passage of Colossians?—"The interpretation which refers what is here said of our Saviour, to the new creation, or the renovation of all things, is so forced and violent, that it can hardly be thought, that men would ever have espoused it, but for the sake of an hypothesis. The reader may meet with a confutation of it in most commentators." Paraphrase, &c. p. 12, note w, of the other express declarations in that chapter, on the subject of Christ's pre-existence in general, as well as on that of the creation by him in particular, is but to little purpose. It is replied, that in that chapter, the Logos, to whose operations the effects there spoken of are ascribed, does not imply a person, but an attribute: and that the work of creation is consequently not attributed to Christ, but to the WISDOM of God the Father. This is not the place to discuss this point. Whoever wishes to see it fully examined, may consult Whitby, Doddridge and Rosenmuller. To the enquiring reader I would more particularly recommend upon this head, Pearson on the Creed, p. 116—120: Le Clerc, Nov. Test. tom. i. p. 392—400: Wits. Misc. Sacr. tom. ii. p. 88—118: Whitaker's Origin of Arianism, p. 39—114: Howes's Critical Observations, vol. iv. p. 38—198: Bishop of Lincoln's Elements, Art. ii. and Dr. Laurence's Dissertation upon the Logos.

But I am content to rest the whole issue of the question, upon the state of the case furnished by the Socinian or Unitarian writers themselves. Let the reader but look into the translation of this chapter by Mr. Wakefield, and let him form his judgment of the merits of the Socinian hypothesis, from the mode of expounding Scripture, which he will there find employed for its support. Let him try, if he can even comprehend the distinct propositions contained in the first fourteen verses. Let him try, if he can annex any definite notions to the assertion, that wisdom (meaning thereby an attribute of God) was God: or to the assurance so strongly enforced by repetition, that the wisdom of God was with God; in other words, that the Deity had not existed before his own essential attributes:—or again, if he can conceive, how the Evangelist (supposing him in his senses) could have thought it necessary, after pronouncing the true light to be God, formally to declare that John was not that light: or how he could affirm, that the wisdom which he had spoken of but as an attribute, was made flesh, and became a person, visible, and tangible:—in short, let him try, if he does not find, both in the translation and the explanatory notes, as much unintelligible jargon as was ever crowded into the same compass; nay, as is even, according to Mr. Wakefield's notion, to be found in the Athanasian creed itself. This however is called a candid and critical investigation of Scripture; and this, it is to be remembered, is the latest,* and

* Notes on all the Books of Scripture, by Dr. Priestley, have issued from the press since the first edition of this work: and to the exposition there attempted of the introduction of St. John's Gospel, the remarks, which I have made on Mr. Wakefield's translation, apply as aptly, as if for that they had been originally designed. Whoever has a curiosity to discover whether Mr. Wakefield or Dr.

therefore to be supposed the best digested, production of the Socinian school: it comes also from the hands of a writer certainly possessed of classical erudition, a quality of which few of his Unitarian fellow labourers in the sister country are entitled to boast.

But to add one instance more, of the ingenious mode of reasoning, employed by these writers on the subject of Christ's pre-existence: in the 8th chap. of John we find our Saviour arguing with the Jews; who, on his asserting that Abraham had seen his day, immediately reply, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham? Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, before Abraham was, I AM. The inference from this, that our Saviour here declared himself to have existed before the time of Abraham, appears not to be a very violent one; his answer being immediately and necessarily applied to the remark made by the Jews upon his age, which rendered it impossible that he could have seen Abra-

Priestley be the more unintelligible, may consult Notes, &c. vol. iii. pp. 18, 19, compared with Mr. Wakefield's comment already referred to. In addition to this work, there has yet more lately been given to the public from the Socinian press, what the authors are pleased to call An improved Version of the New Testament. What new lights this improved Version has thrown upon this part of Scripture, will be seen when we come more particularly to notice this performance in another part of these volumes.

ham: so that this passage will be admitted to be one of those, that “seem directly to assert the pre-existence of Christ.” Now in what way have Socinus, and his followers, got rid of this seeming contradiction to their opinions?” Πρην Αβρααμ γενεσθαι, εγω ειμι, must be thus translated: Before Abram can be ABRAHAM, that is, THE FATHER OF MANY NATIONS, I must be—THE MESSIAH, or Saviour of the world. This famous discovery, which belongs to Socinus, was indeed esteemed of a nature, so far above mere human apprehension, that his nephew Faustus Socinus informs us, he had received it from divine inspiration.—Non sine multis precibus ipsius, Jesu nomine invocato, impetravit ipse. (Socinus contr. Eutrop. tom. 2. p. 678.) This sublime interpretation has, it must be confessed, been relinquished by later Socinians, who in imitation of Grotius, consider Christ as asserting only, that he was before Abraham in the decree of God. But how this could serve as a reply to the objection of the Jews, respecting priority of actual existence; or how in this, Christ said any thing of himself, that was not true of every human being, and therefore nugatory; or why the Jews upon a declaration, so innocent, and so unmeaning, should have been fired with rage against him as a blasphemer; or (if the sense be, that Christ existed in the divine mind antecedent, not to Abraham’s birth, but to his existence in the divine mind likewise) what the meaning can be of a priority in the divine foreknowledge;— I leave to Mr. Belsham and his assistant commentators to unfold. Indeed this last interpretation seems not to have given entire satisfaction to Socinians themselves, as we find from a paper signed Discipulus, in the 4th vol. of the Theol. Repos. in which it is asserted, “that the modern Unitarians, have needlessly departed from the interpretation given by Slichtingius, Enjidinus, and other old Socinians, and have adopted another in its stead, which is not to be supported by any just grammatical construction.” This gentleman then goes on to furbish up the old Socinian armour, and exults in having rendered it completely proof against all the weapons of Orthodoxy.

Mr. Wakefield however seems to think it safer to revert to the principles of Grotius’s interpretation: and accordingly having fortified it against the charge of grammatical inaccuracy, he presents it in somewhat of a new shape, by translating the passage, Before Abraham was born, I am HE—viz. the Messiah. By which, he says, Christ means to imply, that “his mission was settled and certain before the birth of Abraham.” That Mr. Wakefield has, by this construction, not only avoided the mystical conceits of Socinus’s interpretation, but also some of the errors chargeable on that of Grotius, cannot be denied: but, besides that he has built his entire translation of the passage, upon the arbitrary assumption of an ellipsis, to which the texts quoted as parallel furnish no support whatever, it remains, as before, to be shewn, what intelligible connexion subsists between our Lord's answer, and the question put to him by the Jews. If he meant merely to say, that his mission as the Messiah had been ordained before the birth of Abraham, (which is in itself a tolerable strain upon the words even of this new translation,) it will require all Mr. Wakefield's ingenuity, to explain in what way this could have satisfied the Jews, as to the possibility of Christ's having actually seen Abraham, which is the precise difficulty our Lord proposes to solve by his reply. Doctor Priestley, in his later view of this subject, has not added much in point of clearness or consistency to the Socinian exposition. He confesses, however, that the "literal meaning of our Lord's expressions" in the 56th verse was, that "he had lived before Abraham," and that it was so considered by the Jews: but at the same time he contends that our Lord did not intend his words to be so understood: and that when he afterwards speaks of his priority to Abraham, his meaning is to be thus explained; "that in a very proper sense of the words, he may be said to have been even before Abraham, the Messiah having been held forth as the great object of hope and joy for the human race, not only to Abraham, but even to his ancestors." (Notes, &c. vol. iii. pp. 329, 330, 333, 334.) Such is what Dr. Priestley calls the proper sense of the words, BEFORE ABRAHAM WAS, I AM.

I have here given a very few instances, but such as furnish a fair specimen, of the mode of reasoning, by which those enlightened commentators to whom Mr. Belsham refers, have been enabled to explain away the direct and evident meaning of Scripture. I have adduced these instances, from the arguments which they have used relating to the pre-existence of Christ, as going to the very essence of their scheme of Christianity, (if such it can be called,) and as being some of those on which they principally rely. I have not scrupled to dwell thus long, upon a matter not necessarily connected with the subject of these discourses, as some benefit may be derived to the young student in divinity, (for whom this publication has been principally intended,) from exposing the hollowness of the ground, on which these high-sounding gentlemen take their stand, whilst they trumpet forth their own extensive knowledge, and the ignorance of those, who differ from them. These few instances may serve to give him some idea, of the fairness of their pretensions, and the soundness of their criticism. He may be still better able to form a judgment of their powers in scriptural exposition, when he finds upon trial, that the formulæ of interpretation, which have been applied to explain away the notion of Christ's pre-existence, from the passages that have been cited, may be employed with the best success in arguing away such a meaning, from any form of expression that can be devised.

Thus, for example, had it been directly asserted, that our Lord had existed for ages, before his appearance in this world: it is replied, all this is true, in the decree of God, but it by no means relates to an actual existence. Had Christ, as a proof of his having existed prior to his incarnation, expressly declared, that all things had been created by him: the answer is obvious—he must have been ordained by the divine mind, long before he came into being, as by him, it had been decreed, that the great moral creation, whereby a new people should be raised up to God, was to be wrought. Should he go yet farther, and affirm that he had resigned the God-like station which he filled, and degraded himself to the mean condition of man: a ready solution is had for this also—he made no ostentatious display of his miraculous powers, but offered himself to the world like an ordinary man. If any stronger forms of expression should be used (and stronger can scarcely be had, without recurring to the language of Scripture) they may all be disposed of in like manner.

But should even all the varieties of critical, logical, and metaphysical refinement, be found in any case insufficient, yet still we are not to suppose the point completely given up. The modern Unitarian Commentator is not discomfited. He retires with unshaken fortitude within the citadel of his philosophic conviction, and under its impenetrable cover, bids defiance to the utmost force of his adversary's argument. Of this let Dr. Priestley furnish an instance in his own words. Endeavouring to prove, in opposition to Dr. Price, that the expressions in John, vi. 62, What, and if you shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before? furnish no argument in favour of Christ's pre-existence, he uses the following remarkable language—that "though not satisfied with any interpretation of this extraordinary passage, yet rather than believe our Saviour to have existed in any other state before the creation of the world, or to have left some state of great dignity and happiness when he came hither, he would have recourse to the old and exploded Socinian idea of Christ's actual ascent into heaven, or of his imagining that he had been carried up thither in a vision; which, like that of St. Paul, he had not been able to distinguish from a reality: nay, he would not build an article of faith, of such magnitude, on the correctness of John's recollection and representation of our Lord's language; and so strange and incredible does the hypothesis of a pre-existent state appear, that sooner than admit it, he would suppose the whole verse to be an interpolation, or that THE OLD APOSTLE DICTATED ONE THING AND HIS AMANUENSIS WROTE ANOTHER." (Letters to Dr. Price, pp. 57, 58, &c.)—Thus is completed the triumph of Unitarian philosophy over revelation: and thus is the charge of incredulity against the pretended philosopher of the present day refuted. For what is there too monstrous for his belief, if you except only the truths of the Gospel?

NO. II.—UNITARIAN OBJECTIONS TO THE RELIGIOUS OBSERVANCE OF STATED DAYS.

PAGE 3. (b) That the day, on which the Saviour of men laid down his life for their transgressions, should have attached to it any feelings of reverence, or should be in any respect distinguished from the number of ordinary days, has long been denied by different classes of dissenters from the established form; forgetting, that its celebration was designed, to awaken livelier feelings of devotion, by associating circumstances; and not reflecting, that the argument which went to prove, that no one day could possess a sanctity above another, should have carried them much farther, and have ended in the abolition of the Sabbath itself. The writer however, already alluded to in the last number. has, in his answer to Mr. Wilberforce's most excellent and truly pious work on the present state of Religion, completely removed the charge of inconsistency, by directly asserting, that "Christianity expressly abolishes all distinction of days." "To a true Christian," he observes, "every day is a sabbath, every place is a temple, and every action of life an act of devotion"—"whatever is lawful or expedient upon any one day of the week, is, under the Christian dispensation, equally lawful and expedient on any other." (Belsham's Review, &c. p. 20.)

Lest we should however imagine, that this writer means to impose upon Christians so severe a duty, as to require them to substitute for occasional acts of devotion, that unceasing homage, which the unbroken continuity of the Christian's Sabbath, and the ubiquity of his Temple, might seem to demand; he informs us (p. 133.) that "a virtuous man is performing his duty to the Supreme Being, as really, and as acceptably, when he is pursuing the proper business of life, or even when enjoying its innocent and decent amusements, as when he is offering direct addresses to him, in the closet, or in the Temple." And thus we see the matter is rendered perfectly easy. A Christian may be employed, through the entire of his life in worshipping his God, by never once thinking of him, but merely pursuing his proper business or his innocent amusements. This, it is true, is a natural consequence from his first position; and gives to the original argument a consistency, which before it wanted. But is consistency of argument a substitute for Christianity? Or could the teacher of divinity at Hackney, have expected, that from such instructions, his pupils should not so far profit, as to reject not only Christianity, but many of them the public worship, and with it the recollection, of a God?—It may be worth while to enquire, what has been the fact, respecting the Students of the late Academy at Hackney: and, indeed, what is the state of all the Dissenting Academies throughout Great Britain into which the subverting principles of Unitarianism have made their way. Do any of this description now exist?—And wherefore do they not?—But on this subject more in the Appendix.

NO. III.—ON THE IMPORTANCE OF THE DOCTRINE OF REDEMPTION.

PAGE 3. (c). There is no one article of the Christian faith, which considered in itself, is more deserving of our closest attention, than that of our redemption by Jesus Christ. This is in truth, the very corner-stone of the fabric. Against this, accordingly, every framer of a new hypothesis directs his entire force. This once shaken, the whole structure falls in ruins. We therefore find the collective powers of heterodox ingenuity summoned to combat this momentous doctrine, in a work published some years back, entitled the Theological Repository. Of what consequence in the frame and essence of Christianity, it was deemed by the principal marshaller of this controversial host, may be inferred, not only from the great labour he has bestowed on this one subject (having written five different essays in that work, in opposition to the received doctrine of atonement) but also from his express declarations. In Theol. Rep. v. 1. p. 429, he pronounces this doctrine to be “one of the radical, as well as the most generally prevailing corruptions of the Christian scheme:” and in p. 124, he calls it “a disgrace to Christianity, and a load upon it, which it must either throw off, or sink under.” And lest the combined exertions of the authors of this work might not prove sufficient to overturn this unchristian tenet, he renews his attack upon it with undiminished zeal in his History of the Corruptions of Christianity; among which he ranks this as one of the most important, stating (v. 1. p. 152) that “as the doctrine of the Divine Unity was infringed by the introduction of that of the Divinity of Christ, and of the Holy Ghost (as a person distinct from the Father); so the doctrine of the natural placability of the Divine Being, and our ideas of the equity of his government, have been greatly debased by the gradual introduction of the modern doctrine of atonement." And on this account he declares his intention, of shewing in a fuller manner, than with respect to any other of the corruptions of Christianity, that it is totally unfounded both in reason and Scripture, and an entire departure from the genuine doctrine of the Gospel. Indeed the avowed defender of the Socinian heresy, must have felt it indispensable to the support of his scheme, to set aside this doctrine. Thus (Hist. of Cor. v. 1. p. 272) he says, "it immediately follows from his" (Socinus's) "principles, that Christ being only a man, though ever so innocent, his death could not in any proper sense of the word, atone for the sins of other men." Accordingly, both in his History of the Corruptions, and in the Theological Repository, he bends his principal force against this doctrine of our church. Shall not then so determined a vehemence of attack upon this doctrine in particular, convince us still more of its importance in the Christian scheme; and point out to the friends of Gospel truth, on what ground they are chiefly to stand in its defence?

NO. IV.—PARDON NOT NECESSARILY CONSEQUENT UPON REPENTANCE.

PAGE 6. (d) Balguy in his Essay on Redemption (and, after him, Dr. Holmes*) has argued

* The late Dr. Holmes, for some years Canon of Christ Church in Oxford, and afterwards Dean of Winchester. I cannot mention this gentleman's name, without paying to it that tribute of respect which it so justly claims. To his indefatigable and learned research, the public is indebted for one of the most valuable additions to biblical literature, which at this day it is capable of receiving. Treading in the steps of that great benefactor to the biblical student, Dr. Kennicot, he devoted a life to the collection of materials, for the emendation of the text of the Septuagint Scriptures, as his distinguished predecessor had done for that of the Hebrew. After the most assiduous, and, to a person not acquainted with the vigour of Dr. Holmes's mind, almost incredible labour, in the collation of MSS. and versions, he was enabled to give to the public the valuable result of his enquiries, in one complete volume of the Pentateuch, and the Book of Daniel. That it was not allotted to him to finish the great work in which he had engaged, is most deeply to be regretted. It is, however, to be hoped, that the learned University, on whose reputation his labours have reflected additional lustre, will not permit an undertaking of such incalculable utility to the Christian world, to remain unaccomplished, especially as the materials for its prosecution, which the industry of Dr. Holmes has so amply supplied, and which remain deposited in the Bodleian Library, must leave comparatively but little to be done for its final execution. The preface to the volume which has been published, concludes with these words: "Hoc unum super-this point, with uncommon strength and clearness. The case of penitence, he remarks, is clearly different from that of innocence: it implies a mixture of guilt pre-contracted, and punishment proportionably deserved. It is consequently inconsistent with rectitude, that both should be treated alike by God. The present conduct of the Penitent will receive God's approbation: but the reformation of the Sinner cannot have a retrospective effect. The agent may be changed, but his former sins cannot be thereby cancelled: the convert and the sinner are the same individual person: and the agent must be answerable for his whole conduct. The conscience of the Penitent furnishes a fair view of the case. His sentiments of himself, can be only a mixture of approbation and disapprobation, satisfaction and displeasure. His past sins must still, however sincerely he may have reformed, occasion

est monendum, quod Collationes istæ ex omni genere, quæ ad hoc opus per hos quindecim annos, jam fuerunt elaboratæ, in Bibliothecâ Bodleianâ reponantur, atque vel a me, si vivam et valeam, vel si aliter acciderit, ab alio quodam Editore, sub auspicio Colendissimorum Typographeï Clarendoniani Oxoniensis Curatorum, in publicum emittentur."—The language also of the valuable and much to be lamented author, (with whom I was personally acquainted, and had for some years the satisfaction of corresponding,) was always such as to encourage the expectation here held out. That this expectation should be gratified, and with all practicable dispatch, cannot but be the anxious wish of every person interested in the pure and unadulterated exposition of Scripture truth.

self-dissatisfaction: and this will even be the stronger, the more he improves in virtue. Now as this is agreeable to truth, there is reason to conclude, that God beholds him in the same light—see Balguj's Essay, 1785. p. 31—55, and Mr. Holmes's Four Tracts, p. 138, 139.—The author of the Scripture Account of Sacrifices, Part 1. Sect. 6. and Part 4. Sect. 4. has likewise examined this subject in a judicious manner.—It may be worth remarking also, as Dr. Shuckford has done, that Cicero goes no farther on this head than to assert, Quem pœnitet peccasse, penè est innocens.

Lamentable it is to confess, that the name of Warburton is to be coupled with the defence of the deistical objection, against which the above reasoning is directed. But no less true is it than strange, that in the account of natural religion, which that eminent writer has given, in the ixth. book of the Divine Legation, he has pronounced, in terms the most unqualified, upon the intrinsic and necessary efficacy of repentance: asserting, that it is plainly obvious to human reason, from a view of the connexion that must subsist between the creature and his Maker, that whenever man forfeits the favour of God by a violation of the moral law, his sincere repentance entitles him to the pardon of his transgressions.—I have been led, with the less reluctance, to notice this pernicious paradox of the learned Bishop, because it affords me the opportunity of directing the reader's attention to the judicious and satisfactory refutation, which it has lately received, in a prize essay, in one of the Sister Universities. See Mr. Pearson's Critical Essay on the ixth Book of the Divine Legation, p. 25—34. The reasons that induced Warburton to adopt so heterodox a position, are assigned by himself in one of his private letters to his friend Dr. Hurd, and are to the full as insufficient as the position is untenable. These, together with the alarm given to Dr. Hurd by the new doctrine taken up by his friend, will be found noticed in the Letters from a late Eminent Prelate, p. 421—423.

NO. V.—THE SENSE ENTERTAINED BY MANKIND OF THE NATURAL INEFFICACY OF REPENTANCE, PROVED FROM THE HISTORY OF HUMAN SACRIFICES.

PAGE 8. (c) If we look to the practices of the Heathen world, we shall find the result of the reasoning, which is advanced in the page referred to, confirmed from experience by abundant proof. We shall find, that almost the entire of the religion of the Pagan nations, consisted in rites of deprecation. Fear of the Divine displeasure, seems to have been the leading feature, in their religious impressions; and in the diversity, the costliness, and the cruelty of their sacrifices, they sought to appease Gods, to whose wrath they felt themselves exposed, from a consciousness of sin, unrelieved by any information as to the means of escaping its effects. So strikingly predominant was this feature of terror in the gentile superstitions, that we find it expressly laid down by the father of Grecian history, το Θειον παν φθονερον τε και παραχωδες (Herod. Lib. 1. cap. 32): and Porphyry directly asserts, “that there was wanting some universal method of delivering men’s souls, which no sect of philosophy had ever yet found out.” (August. de civit. Dei. Lib. x. cap. 32.)—that is, that something besides their own repentance, was wanting to appease the anger of their Gods.

The universal prevalence of HUMAN SACRIFICES, throughout the Gentile world, is a decisive proof of the light, in which the human mind, unaided by revelation, is disposed to view the divinity; and clearly evinces, how little likelihood there is in the supposition, that unassisted reason could discover the sufficiency of repentance, to regain the favour of an offended God. Of this savage custom, Mr. De Paauw (Rech. Phil. sur les Americ. v. 1. p. 211) asserts, that there is no nation mentioned in history, whom we cannot reproach with having, more than once, made the blood of its citizens, stream forth, in holy and pious ceremonies, to appease the divinity when he appeared angry, or to move him when he appeared indolent.”

Of this position, both antient and modern historians, supply the fullest confirmation. Heliodorus (Æthiopic. lib. 10, p. 465—ed. 1630) informs us, that the Ethiopians were required by their laws to sacrifice boys to the Sun, and girls to the Moon. Sanchoniathon, as quoted by Philo, (Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. i. c. 10.) asserts, that among the Phœnicians, “it was customary in great and public calamities, for princes and magistrates to offer up in sacrifice to the avenging demons, the dearest of their offspring,” εις λυτρον τοις τιμωροις δαιμοσι. This practice is also attributed to them by Porphyry. (Euseb. P. Ev. lib. iv.) Herodotus (lib. 4. cap. 62) describes it as a custom with the Scythians, to sacrifice every hundredth man of their prisoners to their God Mars. And Keysler, who has carefully investigated the antiquities of that race, represents the spreading oaks, under which they were used to perform their sanguinary rites, as being always profusely sprinkled with the blood of the expiring victims. (Antiq. Septentr. Dissert. iii.) Of the Egyptians, Diodorus relates it (lib. i. p. 99. ed. Wessel.) to have been an established practice, to sacrifice red haired men at the tomb of Osiris; from which, he says, misunderstood by the Greeks, arose the fable of the bloody rites of Busiris. This charge brought by Diodorus against the Egyptians, is supported by Plutarch, on the authority of Manetho. (Isid.

et Osir. p. 380.) At Heliopolis also, three men were daily offered up to Lucina, which practice Porphyry informs us, was put a stop to by Amasis (see Wessel. Diod. p. 99. n. 86.) And we are told by an Arabian writer, Murtadi, that it had been customary with the Egyptians, to sacrifice to the river Nile, a young and beautiful virgin, by flinging her, decked in the richest attire, into the stream: and, as Mr. Maurice remarks, a vestige of this barbarous custom remains to this day; for we learn from Mr. Savary's Letters on Egypt, (v. 1. p. 118) that the Egyptians annually make a clay statue in the form of a woman, and throw it into the river, previous to the opening of the dam—see Maurice's Indian Antiquities, p. 433.

That this cruel practice existed also among the Chinese, appears from their histories, which record the oblation of their monarch Chingtang, in pacification of their offended Deity, and to avert from the nation the dreadful calamities, with which it was at that time visited. This sacrifice, it is added, was pronounced by the Priests to be demanded by the will of Heaven: and the aged monarch is represented as supplicating at the altar, that his life may be accepted, as an atonement for the sins of the people. (Martin. Hist. Sin. lib. 3. p. 75. ed. 1659.)—Even the Persians, whose mild and beneficent religion appears at this day so repugnant to this horrid usage, were not exempt from its contagion. Not only were their sacred rites, like those of other nations, stained with the blood of immolated victims, as may be seen in Herodotus, (lib. 1. cap. 132. and lib. 7. cap. 113.) Xenophon, (Cyrop. lib. 8.) Arrian, (De Exped. Alex. lib. 6. ad finem.) Ovid, (Fast. lib. 1.) Strabo, (lib. 15. p. 1065. ed. 1707.) Suidas, (in Μίθρα); and as is fully proved by Brissotius, (De Reg. Pers. Princ. lib. 2. a cap. 5. ad cap. 43.): but Herodotus (lib. 7. cap. 114.) expressly pronounces it to have been the Persian custom, to offer human victims by inhumation; Περσικὸν δὲ τῆς ζῶντας κατορύσσειν: and in support of his position adduces two striking instances of the fact; in one of which, his testimony is corroborated by that of Plutarch. The mysteries also of the Persian God Mithra, and the discovery of the Mithriac sepulchral cavern, as described by Mr. Maurice, have led that writer, in the most decisive manner to affix to the Persian votary, the charge of human sacrifice. (Indian Antiquities, pp. 965, 984, &c.)—The ancient Indians likewise, however their descendants at this day may be described by Mr. Orme, (Hist. of Indost. v. 1. p. 5.) as of a nature utterly repugnant to this sanguinary rite, are represented both by Sir W. Jones, (Asiat. Res. v. 1. p. 265.) and Mr. Wilkins, (in his explanatory notes on the Heetopades, note 292,) as having been polluted by the blood of human victims. This savage practice appears also to have been enjoined by the very code of Brahma, as may be seen in the Asiatic Researches, as above referred to. The self-devotions so common among this people, tend likewise to confirm the accusation. On these, and the several species of meritorious suicide extracted from the Ayeen Akbery, by Mr. Maurice, see Ind. Antiq. p. 164—166. The same writer asserts (p. 434.) that the Mahometans have exerted themselves, for the abolition of this unnatural usage, both in India and Egypt. This author indeed abounds with proofs, establishing the fact of human sacrifice in Antient India.

Of the same horrid nature were the rites of the early Druids, as may be seen in Diod. Sic. (v. 1. pp. 354, 355. ed. Wess.) The Massilian Grove of the Gallic Druids, is described by Lucan, in his Pharsalia, (lib. iii. 400, &c.) in terms that make the reader shudder:—"that every branch was reeking with human gore," is almost the least chilling of the poetic horrors, with which he has surrounded this dreadful sanctuary of Druidical superstition. We are informed, that it was the custom of the Gallic Druids, to set up an immense gigantic figure of a wicker man, in the texture of which they entwined above an hundred human victims, and then consumed the whole as an offering to their Gods. For a delineation of this monstrous spectacle, see Clarke's Cæsar, p. 131. fol. ed. 1712. Nor were the Druids of Mona less cruel in their religious ceremonies, than their brethren of Gaul: Tacitus (v. 2. p. 172. ed. Brot.) represents it as their constant usage, to sacrifice to their Gods, the prisoners taken in war: cruore captivo adolere aras, fas habebant. In the Northern nations, these tremendous mysteries were usually buried in the gloom of the thickest woods. In the extended wilds of Arduenna, and the great Hercynian forest particularly, places set apart for this dreadful purpose, abounded.

Phylarchus, as quoted by Porphyry, affirms, that of old, it was a rule with every Grecian state, before they marched against an enemy, to supplicate their Gods by human victims; and accordingly we find human sacrifices attributed to the Thebans, Corinthians, Messenians and Temessenses, by Pausanias; to the Lacedæmonians by Fulgentius, Theodoret and Apollodorus; and to the Athenians by Plutarch, (Themist. p. 262. et Arist. p. 300. ed. Bryan) and it is notorious, that the Athenians, as well as the Massilians, had a custom of sacrificing a man every year, after loading him with dreadful curses, that the wrath of the Gods might fall upon his head, and be turned away from the rest of the citizens—See Suidas on the words περιψήμα, καθαγμα, and φαρμακος.

The practice prevailed also among the Romans, as appears, not only from the devotions so frequent in the early periods of their history, but from the express testimonies of Livy, Plutarch, and Pliny. In the year of Rome 657, we find a law enacted in the Consulship of Lentulus and Crassus, by which it was prohibited: but it appears notwithstanding to have been in existence so late even as in the reign of Trajan; for at this time, three Vestal virgins having been punished for incontinence, the Pontiffs, on consulting the books of the Sibyls to know if a sufficient atonement had been made, and finding that the offended Deity continued incensed, ordered two men and two women, Greeks and Gauls, to be buried alive. (Univ. Hist. v. xiv. p. 588. ed. Dub.) Porphyry also assures us, that even in his time, a man was every year sacrificed at the shrine of Jupiter Latialis.

The same cruel mode of appeasing their offended Gods, we find ascribed to all the other Heathen nations: to the Getæ, by Herodotus, (lib. iv. c. 94.); to the Leucadians, by Strabo, (lib. x. p. 694.); to the Goths, by Jornandes, (De Reb. Getic. cap. xix.); to the Gauls, by Cicero, (pro Fonteio. p. 487. ed. 1684.) and by Cæsar, (Bell. Gall. lib. 6. §. 15.); to the Heruli, by Procop. (Bell. Goth. lib. ii. c. 15.); to the Britons, by Tacitus, (Annal. xiv. 30.) and by Pliny, (lib. xxx. cap. 1.); to the Germans, by Tacitus, (De Mor. Germ. cap. ix.); to the Carthaginians, by Sanchoniathon, (Euseb. P. Ev. lib. i. cap. 10.) by Plato, (in Minoe, Opera p. 565. ed. 1602.) by Pliny, (lib. xxxvi. cap. 12.) by Silius Italicus, (lib. iv. lin. 767, &c.) and by Justin, (lib. xviii. c. 6. and l. xix. c. 1.). Ennius says of them, (ed. Hess. 1707, p. 28.) Poenei sont soliti sos sacrificare puellos. They are reported, by Diodorus, to have offered two hundred human victims at once; and to so unnatural an extreme was this horrid superstition carried by this people, that it was usual for the parent himself, to slaughter the dearest and most beautiful of his offspring at the altars of their bloody deities. Scripture proves the practice to have existed in Canaan, before the Israelites came thither. (Levit. xx. 23.) Of the Arabians, the Cretans, the Cyprians, the Rhodians, the Phœceans, those of Chios, Lesbos, and Tenedos, the same may be established; see Porphyr. apud Euseb. P. Ev. lib. iv. cap. 16. Monimus, as quoted by Clem. Alexand. (Euseb. ibid.) affirms the same of the inhabitants of Pella. And Euripides has given to the bloody altars of the Tauric Diana, a celebrity that rejects additional confirmation.—So that the universality of the practice in the ancient Heathen world, cannot reasonably be questioned.

In what light then, the Heathens of antiquity considered their deities, and how far they were under the impression, of the existence of a Supreme Benevolence requiring nothing but repentance and reformation of life, may be readily inferred, from this review of facts. Agreeably to the inference which these furnish, we find the reflecting Tacitus pronounce, (Hist. lib. i. c. 4.) “that the Gods interfere in human concerns, but to punish”—Non esse curæ Diis securitatem nostram, esse ultionem. And in this, he seems but to repeat the sentiments of Lucan, who in his Pharsalia, (iv. 107, &c.) thus expresses himself:

Felix Roma, quidem, civesque habitura beatos,
Si libertatis Superis tam cura placeret,
Quam vindicta placet—

On this subject, the Romans appear to have inherited the opinions of the Greeks. Meiners (Historia doctrinæ de vero Deo, p. 208.) asserts, that the more ancient Greeks imagined their Gods to be envious of human felicity; so that, whenever any great success attended them, they were filled with terror, lest the Gods should be offended at it, and bring on them some dreadful calamity. In this, the learned professor but affirms, what we have seen in p. 97. is the formal declaration attributed to Solon by Herodotus: a declaration repeated and confirmed by the Historian, in the instances of Polycrates and Xerxes: in the former of which, the prudent Amasis grounds his alarm for the safety of the too prosperous prince of Samos, on the notoriety of the envious nature of the divine being, το θειον επισημενω ως εσι φθονερον (lib. iii. cap. 40.)—and in the latter, the sage Artabanus warns Xerxes, that even the blessings which the Gods bestow in this life, are derived from an envious motive, ο δε θεος γλυκυν γευσας τον αιωνα, φθονερος εν αυτω ευρισκεται εων (lib. vii. cap. 46.) That fear of the Gods, was not an unusual attendant on the belief of their existence, may be inferred likewise from the saying of Plutarch, (De Superst.) τελθ τε μη νομιζειν θεος, μη φοβεισθαι: and Pliny, (lib. 2. cap. 7.) speaking of the deification of death, diseases, and plagues, says, that “these are ranked among the Gods, whilst with a trembling fear we desire to have them pacified,”—dum esse placatas, trepido metu cupimus. Cudworth also, (Intell. Syst. p. 664.) shews, in the instances of Democritus and Epicurus, that terror was attached to the notion of a divine existence; and that it was with a view to get free from this terror, that Epicurus laboured to remove the idea of a providential administration of human affairs. The testimony of Plato is likewise strong to the same purpose: speaking of the punishment of wicked men, he says, all these things “hath Nemesis decreed to be executed in the second period, by the ministry of vindictive terrestrial demons, who are overseers of human affairs ; to which demons, the supreme God hath committed the government of this world.”—De Anima Mundi. Opera p. 1096, ed. Franc. 1602.

Thus the Gentile Religion, in early ages, evidently appears to have been a religion of fear. The same it has been found likewise in later times, and continues to this day. Of the length of time, during which this practice of human sacrifice continued among the Northern nations, Mr. Thorkelin, who was perfectly conversant with Northern literature, furnishes several instances, in his Essay on the Slave Trade. Dittmarus charges the Danes with having put to death in their great sacrifices, no fewer than ninety-nine slaves at once. (Loccen. Antiq. Sue. Goth. lib. i. cap. 3.) In Sweden, on urgent occasions, and particularly in times of scarcity and famine, they sacrificed kings and princes. Loccenius (Histor. Rer. Suecic. lib. i. p. 5.) gives the following account: “Tanta fame Suecia afflicta est, ut ei vix gravior unquam incubuerit ; cives inter se dissidentes, cum pœnam delictorum divinam agnoscerent, primo anno boves, altero homines, tertio regem ipsum, velut iræ cœlestis piaculum, ut sibi persuasum habebant, Odino immolabant:” and we are told, that the Swedes, at one time, boasted of having sacrificed five kings, in a single day. Adam of Bremen, (Hist. Eccles. cap. 234.) speaking of the awful grove of Upsal, a place distinguished for the celebration of those horrid rites, says, "there was not a single tree in it, that was not revered, as gifted with a portion of the divinity, because stained with gore, and foul with human putrefaction." In all the other Northern nations, without exception, the practice is found to have prevailed; and to so late a period did it continue, that we learn from St. Boniface, that Gregory II. was obliged to make the sale of slaves for sacrifice by the German converts, a capital offence; and Carloman in the year 743, found it necessary to pass a law for its prevention. Mallet, whose account of this horrid custom among the Northern nations deserves particularly to be attended to, affirms that it was not abolished in those regions until the ninth century. (Northern Antiquities, vol. i. p. 132—142.) And Jortin (Remarks on Eccles. Hist. v. 5. p. 233.) reports from Fleury, an adherence to this custom, in the island of Rugia, even so late as to the close of the twelfth century.

The same dreadful usage is found to exist, to this day, in Africa; where, in the inland parts, they sacrifice the captives, taken in war, to their fetiches: as appears from Snelgrave, who in the king of Dahome's camp, was witness to his sacrificing multitudes, to the deity of his nation. Among the islanders of the South seas, we likewise learn from Captain Cook, that human sacrifices were very frequent: he speaks of them as customary, in Otaheitè, and the Sandwich Islands; and in the Island of Tongataboo, he mentions ten men offered at one festival. All these however are far exceeded by the pious massacre of human beings, in the nations of America. The accounts given by Acosta, Gomara and other Spanish writers, of the monstrous carnage of this kind, in these parts of the world, are almost incredible. The annual sacrifices of the Mexicans, required many thousands of victims; and in Peru, two hundred children were devoted for the health of the Ynca. (Acost. Hist. of Ind. p. 379—388. ed. 1604.—Anton. de Solis. and Clavig. Hist. of Mex. lib. vi. sect. 18, 19, 20.)—Mr. Maurice also informs us, that at this day, among certain tribes of the Mahrattas, human victims distinguished by their beauty and youthful bloom, are fattened like oxen for the altar, (Ind. Antiq. p. 843.): and the same writer (pp. 1077, 1078.) instances other facts from Mr. Crauford's Sketches of Indian mythology, from which he concludes, that the notion of the efficacy of human sacrifice is by no means extinct in India at the present time. This position is certainly contradictory to the testimonies of Dow, Holwel, and Grose. But as the laborious research of Mr. Maurice, has drawn together numerous and authentic documents in corroboration of his opinion, it may fairly be questioned, whether the authority of these writers is to be considered as of much weight in the opposite scale. The learned professor Meiners

(Historia Doct. de vero Deo. Sect. iv.) does not hesitate to pronounce the two former, unentitled to credit: the first, as being of a disposition too credulous; and the second, as deserving to be reckoned, for fiction and folly, another Megasthenes.* Mr. Dow's incompetency, on the sub-

* In addition to the authorities already referred to upon this head, I would suggest to the reader a perusal of Mr. Mickle's Enquiry into the Brahmin Philosophy, suffixed to the seventh Book of his Translation of Camoens' Lusiad. He will find in that interesting summary, abundant proofs not only of the existence of the practice of human sacrifice in modern India, but also of the total incredibility of the romances of Dow and Holwel: and he will at the same time discover the reason, why these authors are viewed with so much partiality by a certain description of writers. The philosophic tincture of their observations upon religion, and the liberties taken, by Mr. Holwel especially, with both the Mosaic and Christian revelations, were too nearly allied to the spirit of Unitarianism not to have had charms for the advocates of that system.—The superiority of the revelation of Brahma over that of Moses, Mr. Holwel instances in the creation of man. In the former, he says, “the creation of the human form is clogged with no difficulties, no ludicrous unintelligible circumstances, or inconsistencies. God previously constructs mortal bodies of both sexes for the reception of the angelic spirits.” (Mickle's Lusiad, vol. ii. p. 253.) Mr. Holwel, also, in his endeavours to prove the revelation of Birmah and of Christ to be the same, gravely proceeds to solve the difficulty which arises from their present want of resemblance, by asserting, that “the doctrine of Christ, as it is delivered to us, is totally corrupted: that age after age has discoloured it: that even the most ancient ject of the Indian theology, has also been proved by Mr. Haller, who has shewn, in the preface to his translation of the Gentoo Code, (p. 32. ed. 1776.) that writer's total deficiency, in the knowledge of the sacred writings of the Hindoos: and as to Mr. Grose, I refer the reader to the Indian Antiquities, (pp. 249. 255.) for instances of his superficial acquaintance with the affairs of Hindostan. It is of the greater importance, to appreciate truly the value of the testimony given by these writers, as on their reports has been founded a conclusion, directly subversive of the fact here attempted to be established.†

record of its history, the new Testament, is grossly corrupted; that St. Paul by his reveries, and St. Peter by his sanction to kill and eat, began this woful declension, and perversion of the doctrines of Christ." (Mickle's Lusiad, vol. ii. p. 254.) After this, can we wonder, that Dr. Priestley considered this writer sufficiently enlightened, to be admitted as undoubted evidence, in the establishment of whatever facts he might be pleased to vouch? Yet it is whimsical enough, that this writer, who is so eminently philosophical, and as such is so favourite a witness with Dr. Priestley, should have disclosed an opinion with respect to philosophers, so disreputable as the following. "The devil and his chiefs, have often as well as the good angels, taken the human form, and appeared in the character of tyrants, and corrupters of morals, or philosophers, who are (he asserts) the devil's faithful deputies." (Mickle's Lusiad, vol. ii. p. 250.)

† To the curious reader, who may wish to see the latest and most interesting account of the sanguinary superstitions

The subject of this number may derive additional light, from the nature of the representations of the Divinity, throughout the Heathen nations. Thus in the images of the Deity among of the Hindoos, and of the general state of that people in point of civilization, at the present day, I would strongly recommend DR. BUCHANAN'S Memoir on the Expediency of an Ecclesiastical Establishment for British India: in which he will not only find ample confirmation of Mr. Maurice's statements, as to the dreadful extent of human sacrifice among the natives of Hindostan, (see pp. 33, 34, 47—50, 91—104), but also the most affecting exposition of the decaying state of religion amongst their conquerors.

In this latter point of view it is a work that cannot be too generally known nor too attentively perused. The contrast which it exhibits, between the indifference of Protestantism and the zeal of Popery, in those distant regions, is strikingly illustrative of the prevailing character of each. An establishment of eighteen military chaplains, of whom not more than twelve are at any one time in actual appointment,—with three churches, (one at Calcutta, one at Madras, and one at Bombay,) constitutes the entire means of religious instruction, for the vast extent of the British empire in the East: whilst, at the various settlements and factories, at Bencoolen, Canton, and the numerous islands in that quarter in the possession of Britain, not a single clergyman of the English Church is to be found, to perform the rite of baptism, or any other Christian rite whatever. British armies, also, have been known to be not unfrequently in the field without a chaplain: and it is said, that Marquis Cornwallis was indebted to the services of a British officer, for the last solemn offices of interment. The consequence (as Dr. Buchanan states) has been, that “all respect for Christian institutions has worn away; and that the Indians, we find an awful and terrific power the ruling feature. Thousands of outstretched arms and hands, generally filled with swords and daggers, bows and arrows, and every instrument

the Christian sabbath is now no otherwise distinguished, than by the display of the British flag"!!! So that "we seem at present," he says, "to be trying the question, WHETHER RELIGION BE NECESSARY FOR A STATE: whether a remote commercial empire, having no sign of the Deity, no type of any thing heavenly, may not yet maintain its Christian purity and its political strength, amidst Pagan superstitions, and a voluptuous and unprincipled people." The effect also of this want of religious instruction, Dr. Buchanan describes to be such as might naturally be expected,—a general spread of profligacy amongst our own people; and a firm belief amongst the natives, that "THE ENGLISH HAVE NO RELIGION."

Now in what way does Dr. Buchanan describe the exertions of the ROMISH CHURCH to propagate its peculiar tenets? An establishment of three archbishops and seventeen bishops, with a proportional number of churches and inferior clergy, is indefatigably employed in sending through the East, and particularly through the dominions of Protestant Britain, that form of religious faith, which Protestants condemn as perniciously erroneous. In Bengal alone, he states, there are eight Romish churches, besides four Armenian, and two Greek: and it affords matter of melancholy reflection, that we are compelled to derive a consolation under the consequences of our own religious apathy, from the contemplation of those beneficial effects, which Dr. Buchanan ascribes to the influence of this Romish establishment, in its civilizing operation on the minds of the Asiatics.

The sentiments which an acquaintance with these facts must naturally excite, in the minds of such as retain any of destruction, express to the terrified worshipper the cruel nature of the God. The collars of human skulls, the forked tongues shooting from serpents' jaws, the appendages of mutilated corpses, sense of the value of true religion, make it particularly desirable that this work should be known to all; especially to those, who have the power to promote the means of rectifying the dreadful evils which it authenticates. To a religious mind the perusal of the work must undoubtedly be distressing. But from the gloom which the darkness of Pagan superstition, joined to the profligacy of European irreligion, spreads over the recitals it contains, the pious heart will find a relief, in that truly evangelical production of pastoral love, presented in Archbishop Wake's primary charge to the Protestant missionaries in India; and yet more in that delightful picture which is given of the church of Malabar:—a church, which, as it is reported to have been of Apostolic origin, carries with it to this day the marks of Apostolic simplicity; and which presents the astonishing phenomenon of a numerous body of Hindoo Christians, exceeding, both in their practice and their doctrines, the purity of any Christian church since the age of the Apostles. "Such are the heresies of this church," said their Portuguese accusers, that "their clergy married wives; that they owned but two sacraments, baptism and the Lord's supper; that they denied transubstantiation; that they neither invoked saints nor believed in purgatory; and that they had no other orders or names of dignity in the church than bishop or deacon." Such was found to be the state of the church of Malabar in the year 1599; and such there is good reason to believe, had been its state, from its foundation in the earliest times of Christianity. (See Dr. Buchanan's Memoir, pp. 1—8. 12. 18. 55—62. 75—79.) To the question which Popery triumphantly proand all the other circumstances of terrific cruelty which distinguish the Black Goddess, Seeva, Haree, and other of the idols of Hindostan, (Maurice's Ind. Antiq. pp. 182. 253. 327. 381, 382. 856. 857. 882.) sufficiently manifest the genius of that religion, which presented these, as objects of adoration. To the hideous idols of Mexico, one of which was of most gigantic size, seated upon huge snakes, and expressly denominated TERROR, (Clavig. lib. vi. sect. 6.) it was poses to the Protestant, "WHERE WAS YOUR RELIGION BEFORE LUTHER?" the answer, "IN THE BIBLE," derives now an auxiliary from this most important and interesting fact.

I should deem it necessary to apologize to the reader for this digression respecting the contents of Dr. Buchanan's publication, were I not convinced that in drawing attention to its subject, I am doing a real service to Christianity.

As a most valuable Appendix to this publication, I must beg leave also to recommend to the reader the xviiith. article of the 1st. volume of the Quarterly Review. The impious policy that would impede the introduction of the Christian religion into India, is there treated as it deserves. The fashionable sophistry, which had for a time prevailed upon this subject, is most happily exposed by the Reviewer: And with no common talent and address, it is unanswerably proved, to be no less the interest than the duty of the conqueror, to spread the light of the gospel far and wide through the regions of Hindostan. Melancholy it truly is, that such arguments should be wanting to convince a Christian people. Great is the power of the British Empire most undoubtedly. Yet surely if its interests are found to be incompatible with the interests of Christ's kingdom, it cannot be difficult to pronounce which of the two must fall.

usual to present the heart, torn from the breast of the human victim, and to insert it, whilst yet warm and reeking, in the jaws of the blood-thirsty divinity. (Ibid. lib. vi. sect. 18.) The supreme God of the ancient Scythians was worshipped by them, under the similitude of a naked sword (Herod. lib. iv. cap. 62.): and in Valhalla, or the Hall of Slaughter, the Paradise of the terrible God of the Northern European regions, the cruel revelries of Woden were celebrated, by deep potations from the skulls of enemies slain in battle.

Consistent with this character of their Gods, we find the worship of many of the Heathen nations, to consist in suffering and mortification, in cutting their flesh with knives, and scorching their limbs with fire. Of these unnatural and inhuman exercises of devotion, ancient history supplies numberless instances. In the worship of Baal, as related in the book of Kings; and the consecration to Moloch, as practised by the Ammonites, and not infrequently by the Hebrews themselves, the sacred volume affords an incontestible record of this diabolical superstition. Similar practices are attested by almost every page of the profane historian. The cruel austerities of the Gymnosophist both of Africa and India, the dreadful sufferings of the initiated votaries of Mithra and Eleusis, (see Maurice's Ind. Antiq. p. 990—1000) the Spartan διαμασιγασις in honour of Diana, the frantic and savage rites of Bellona, and the horrid self-mutilations of the worshippers of Cybele, but too clearly evince the dreadful views entertained by the ancient Heathens of the nature of their Gods. Of the last named class of Pagan devotees, (to instance one as a specimen of all) we have the following account from Augustine—"Deæ magnæ sacerdotes, qui Galli vocabantur, virilia sibi amputabant, et furore perciti caput rotabant, cultrisque faciem musculosque totius corporis dissecabant; morsibus quoque se ipsos impetebant." (August. de Civ. Dei. pp. 140. 156. ed. 1661.) And Seneca, as quoted by the same writer, (lib. vi. cap. 10.) confirms this report, in the following passage, taken from his work on Superstition, now no longer extant: "Ille viriles sibi partes amputat, ille lacertos secat. Ubi iratos deos timent, qui sic propitios merentur? — Tantus est perturbatæ mentis et sedibus suis pulsæ furor, ut sic Dii placentur quemadmodum ne homines quidem teterrimi.—Se ipsi in templis contrucidant, vulneribus suis ac sanguine supplicant." And it deserves to be remarked, that these unnatural rites, together with that most unnatural of all, human sacrifice, are pronounced by Plutarch (Opera. tom. ii. p. 417. ed. Franc. 1620.) to have been instituted for the purpose of averting the wrath of malignant demons.

Nor have these cruel modes of worship been confined to the Heathens of antiquity. By the same unworthy conceptions of the deity, the Pagans of later times have been led to the same unworthy expressions of their religious feelings. Thus, in the narrative of Cooke's voyages, we are informed, that it was usual with the inhabitants of the Friendly Islands, when afflicted with any dangerous disorder, to cut off their little finger as an offering to the deity, which they deemed efficacious to procure their recovery: and in the Sandwich Islands, it was the custom to strike out the fore-teeth, as a propitiatory sacrifice, to avert the anger of the Eatooa, or divinity. If we look again to the religion of the Mexicans, we meet the same sort of savage superstition, but carried to a more unnatural excess. Clavigero (lib. 6. sect. 22.) says, "it makes one shudder, to read the austerities, which they exercised upon themselves, either in atonement of their transgressions, or in preparation for their festivals:" and then proceeds, in this and the following sections, to give a dreadful description indeed, of the barbarous self-lacerations, practised both by the Mexicans and Tlascalans, in the discharge of their religious duties: and yet he afterwards asserts, (v. ii. p. 446. 4to. ed. Lond.) that all these, horrid as they are, must be deemed inconsiderable, when compared with the inhumanities of the ancient Priests of Bellona and Cybele, of whom we have already spoken; and still more so, when contrasted with those of the penitents of the East Indies and Japan.

With good reason, indeed, has the author made this concluding remark: for of the various austerities, which have been at different times practised as means of propitiating superior powers, there are none, that can be ranked with those of the devotees of Hindostan, at the present day. Dreadful as Mr. Maurice represents the rites of Mithra and Eleusis to have been, dreadful as we find the other rites that have been noticed, yet their accumulated horrors fall infinitely short of the penitentiary tortures endured by the Indian Yogee, the Gymnosophist of modern times—"to suspend themselves on high in cages, upon trees considered sacred, refusing all sustenance, but such as may keep the pulse of life just beating; to hang aloft upon tenter-hooks, and voluntarily bear inexpressible agonies; to thrust themselves by hundreds, under the wheels of immense machines, that carry about their unconscious Gods, where they are instantly crushed to atoms; at other times, to hurl themselves from precipices of stupendous height; now to stand up to their necks in rivers, till rapacious alligators come to devour them; now to bury themselves in snow till frozen to death; to measure with their naked bodies, trained over burning sands, the ground lying between one pagoda and another, distant perhaps many leagues; or to brave, with fixed eyes, the ardor of a meridian sun between the tropics ;” these, with other penances not less tremendous, which Mr. Maurice has fully detailed in the last vol. of his Indian Antiquities, are the means, whereby the infatuated worshippers of Brahma hope to conciliate the deity, and to obtain the blessings of immortality: and by these, all hope to attain those blessings, except only the wretched race of the Chandalahs, whom, by the unalterable laws of Brahma, no repentance, no mortification can rescue from the doom of eternal misery; and against whom the gates of happiness are for ever closed.—See Maur. Ind. Antiq. pp. 960, 961.

Now, from this enumeration of facts, it seems not difficult to decide, whether the dictate of untutored reason be, the conviction of the DIVINE BENEVOLENCE, and the persuasion that the Supreme Being is to be conciliated, by good and virtuous conduct alone: and from this also we shall be enabled to judge, what degree of credit is due to the assertions of those who pronounce, that “all men naturally apprehend the Deity to be propitious:” that “no nation whatever, either Jew or Heathen, ancient or modern, appears to have had the least knowledge, or to betray the least sense of their want, of any expedient of satisfaction for sin, besides repentance and a good life: and that “from a full review of the religions of all ancient and modern nations, they appear to be utterly destitute of any thing like a doctrine of proper atonement."

These assertions Doctor Priestley has not scrupled to make; (Theol. Rep. v. i. pp. 401. 411. 416. and 421.) and boldly offers "the range of the whole Jewish and Heathen world" to supply a single fact in contradiction. He professes also to survey this wide-extended range himself; and for this purpose, begins with adducing a single passage from Virgil, whence he says, it appears, that "even the implacable hatred of Juno could be appeased;" and an instance from the Phædon of Plato, from which he concludes, that Socrates, although "the farthest possible from the notion of appeasing the anger of the Gods by any external services, yet died without the least doubt of an happy immortality;" notwithstanding that in p. 31, when treating of another subject, he had found it convenient to represent this philosopher as utterly disbelieving a future state; and even here, he adds, what renders his whole argument a nullity, provided there were any such state for man. Having by the former of these, established his position, as to the religion of the vulgar, among the Greeks and Romans; and by the latter, as to the religion of the philosophers: he yet farther endeavours to fortify his conclusion by the assertion, that no facts have been furnished either by Gale or Clarke, to justify the opinion, that the ancients were at a loss as to the terms of divine acceptance; notwithstanding that not only Clarke, (Evidences, v. ii. pp. 662—670. fol. 1738.) but Leland, (Christ. Rev. vol. i. pp. 259. 270. 473. 4to. 1764.) and various other writers have collected numerous authorities on this head, and that the whole mass of heathen superstitions speaks no other language, insomuch that Bolingbroke himself (vol. v. pp. 214, 215. 4to.) admits the point in its fullest extent. He next proceeds to examine the religion of the ancient Persians and modern Parsis: and to prove this people to have been free from any idea of atonement or sacrifice, he quotes a prayer from Dr. Hyde, and a description of their notion of future punishments from Mr. Grose: and though these can at the utmost apply only to the present state of the people, (and whoever will consult Dr. Hyde's history, pp. 570. 574. on the account given by Tavernier, of their notion of absolution; and on that given by himself, of their ceremony of the Scape-Dog, will see good reason to deny the justness even of this application) yet Dr. P. has not scrupled to extend the conclusion derived from them to the ancient Persians, in defiance of the numerous authorities referred to in this number, and notwithstanding that, as Mr. Richardson asserts, (Dissert. pp. 25, 26. 8vo. 1778.) the Parsis acknowledge the original works of their ancient lawgiver to have been long lost; and that, consequently, the ceremonials of the modern Guebres, preserve little or no resemblance to the ancient worship of Persia. See also Hyde, Rel. Vet. Pers. p. 574. ed. Oxon. 1760. Our author, last of all, cites the testimonies of Mr. Dow and Mr. Grose, to establish the same point concerning the religion of the Hindoos; and particularly to shew, that it was “a maxim with the Brahmans, never to defile their sacrifices with blood.” The value to be attached to these testimonies, may be estimated, from what has been already advanced concerning these writers; from the terrific representations of the Gods of Hindostan; the cruel austerities with which they were worshipped; and the positive declarations of the most authentic and recent writers on the history of the Hindoos.

Thus, not a single authority of those adduced by Dr. Priestley, is found to justify his position. But admitting their fullest application, to what do they amount?—to an instance of relenting hatred in Juno, as described by Virgil; an example of perfect freedom from all apprehension of divine displeasure, in the case of Socrates; and a quotation or two from Mr. Dow and Mr. Grose, with a prayer from Dr. Hyde, to ascertain the religious notions of the Parsis and the Hindoos. These, with a few vague observations on the tenets of certain Atheists of ancient and modern times; the tendency of which is to shew, that men who did not believe in a moral Governor of the Universe, did not fear one; complete his survey of the religious history of the Heathen world:—and in the conclusion, derived from this very copious induction, he satisfactorily acquiesces, and boldly defies his opponents to produce a single contradictory instance.—(N. B. His abstract of the Jewish testimonies, I reserve for a distinct discussion in another place: see No. XXXIII.)

When Dr. Priestley thus gravely asserts, that by this extensive review of facts, he has completely established the position, that natural religion impresses no fears of divine displeasure, and prescribes no satisfaction for offended justice beyond repentance; it seems not difficult to determine, how far he relies upon the ignorance of his readers, and upon the force of a bold assertion. As to the position itself, it is clear, that never was an αυτος εφα, more directly opposed to the voice of history, and to notoriety of fact. Parkhurst, in his Hebrew Lexicon, on the word כשן, says, “it is known to every one, who is acquainted with the mythology of the Heathens, how strongly and generally they retained the tradition of an atonement or expiation for sin.” What has been already offered, in this number, may perhaps appear sufficient to justify this affirmation. But, indeed, independent of all historical research, a very slight glance at the Greek and Roman Classics, especially the Poets, the popular divines of the antients, can leave little doubt upon this head. So clearly does their language announce the notion of a propitiatory atonement, that if we would avoid an imputation on Dr. Priestley's fairness, we are driven of necessity, to question the extent of his acquaintance with those writers. Thus in Homer, (Il. i. 386.) we find the expression Θεου ιλασκεσθαι so used, as necessarily to imply the appeasing the anger of the God: and again (Il. ii. 550.) the same expression is employed, to denote the propitiation of Minerva by sacrifice, Ευθαδε μιν ταυροισι και αρνειοις ιλαονται. Hesiod, in like manner, (Εργ. και Ημ. 338.) applies the term in such a sense as cannot be misunderstood. Having declared the certainty, that the wicked would be visited by the divine vengeance; he proceeds to recommend sacrifice, as amongst the means of rendering the deity propitious—Αλλοτε δη σπονδησι θυεσσιτε ιλασκεσθαι. Plutarch makes use of the word, expressly in reference to the anger of the Gods, εξιλασασθαι το μηνιμα της θεε. That the words ιλασκεσθαι, ιλασμος, &c. carry with them the force of rendering propitious an offended deity, might be proved by various other instances from the writers of antiquity: and that in the use of the terms αποτροπιασμα ογ αποτροπιασμος, καθαρισμα, περιψημα, and φαρμακος, the antients meant to convey the idea of a piacular sacrifice averting the anger of the Gods, he who is at all conversant with their writings needs not to be informed. The word περιψημα particularly, Hesychius explains by the synonymous terms, αντιλυτρον, αντιψυχον: and Suidas describes its meaning in this remarkable manner, Ουτως επελεγον (Αθηναιοι) τω κατ' ενιαυτον συνεχοντι παντων κακα· (this Schleusner affirms to be the true reading)—περιψημα ημων γενε, ητοι σωτηρια και απολυτρωσις. Και ουτως ενεβαλλον τη θαλασση, ωσανει τω Ποσειδωνι θυσιαν αποτινυντες.

Nor is the idea of propitiatory atonement, more clearly expressed by the Greek, than it is by the Latin, writers of antiquity. The words placare, propitiare, expiare, litare, placamen, piaculum, and such like, occur so frequently, and with such clearness of application, that their force cannot be easily misapprehended, or evaded. Thus Horace, (lib. ii. sat. 3.) Prudens placavi sanguine Divos: and (lib. i. Ode 28.) Teque piacula nulla resolvent: and in his second Ode, he proposes the question, cui dabit partes scelus expiandi Jupiter? (“to which,” says Parkhurst whimsically enough, “the answer in the Poet is, Apollo—the second person in the Heathen Trinity.”) Cæsar likewise, speaking of the Gauls, says, as has been already noticed, Pro vita hominis nisi vita hominis reddatur, non posse deorum immortalium numen placari arbitrantur. Cicero (pro Fonteio. x.) speaking of the same people, says, Si quando aliquo metu adducti, deos placandos esse arbitrantur, humanis hostiis eorum aras ac templa funestant. The same writer (De Nat. Deor. lib. iii. cap. 6.) says, Tu autem etiam Deciorum devotionibus placatos Deos esse censes. From Silius Italicus and Justin, we have the most explicit declarations, that the object of the unnatural sacrifices of the Carthaginians, was to obtain pardon from the Gods. Thus the former (lib. 4. lin. 767, &c.)—

Mos fuit in populis, quos condidit advena Dido
 Poscere cæde Deos veniam, ac flagrantibus aris
 (Infandum dictu) parvos imponere natos—

And in like manner the latter (lib. xviii. cap. 6.) expresses himself; Homines ut victimas immolabant: et impuberes aris admovebant; pacem sanguine eorum exposcentes, pro quorum vitâ Dii rogari maxime solent. Lucan also, referring to the same bloody rites, usual in the worship of the cruel Gods of the Saxons, thus speaks of them (Pharsal. lib. i. lin. 443. &c.)

Et quibus immitis placatur sanguine divo Teutates, horrensque feris altaribus Hesus, Et Tharamis Scythiæ non mitior ara Diauæ—

Virgil likewise, (Æn. ii. lin. 116.)

Sanguine placastis ventos, et virgine casâ,
 Sanguine quærendi reditus, animâque litandum
 Argolicâ ———

Suetonius relates of Otho. (cap. 7.) Per omnia piaculorum genera, manes Galbæ propitiare tentasse. And Livy (lib. vii. cap. 2.) says, Cum vis morbi nec humanis consiliis, nec ope divinâ levaretur, ludi quoque scenici, inter alia cœlestis iræ placamina institui dicuntur: and the same writer, in another place, directly explains the object of animal sacrifice; Per dies aliquot, hostiæ majores sine litatione cæsæ, diuque non impetrata pax Deûm. The word litare is applied in the same manner by Pliny, (De Viris Illust. Tull. Host.) Dum Numam sacrificiis imitatur, Jovi Elicio litare non potuit; fulmine ictus cum regiâ conflagravit. This sense of the word might be confirmed by numerous instances. Servius, (Æn. iv. lin. 50.) and Macrobius, (lib. iii. cap. 5.) inform us, that it implies, “facto sacrificio placare numen:” and Stephanus says from Nonius, that it differs from sacrificare in this, that the signification of the latter is, veniam petere, but that of the former, veniam impetrare.

But to produce all the authorities on this head, were endless labour: and indeed to have produced so many, might seem to be an useless one, were it not of importance to enable us to appreciate with exactness, the claims to literary pre-eminence, set up by a writer, who on all occasions pronounces ex cathedra; and on whose dicta, advanced with an authoritative and imposing confidence, and received by his followers with implicit reliance, has been erected a system, embracing the most daring impieties, that have ever disgraced the name of Christianity. If the observations in this number, of the length of which I am almost ashamed, have the effect of proving to any of his admirers, the incompetency of the guide whom they have hitherto followed with unsuspecting acquiescence, I shall so far have served the cause of truth and of christianity, and shall have less reason to regret the trouble occasioned both to the reader and to myself, by this prolix detail.

NO. VI.—ON THE MULTIPLIED OPERATION OF THE DIVINE ACTS.

PAGE 10. (f)—This thought we find happily conveyed by Mr. Pope, in his Essay on Man :

“ In human works, tho’ laboured on with pain,
“ A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
“ In God’s, one single does its end produce;
“ Yet serves to second too, some other use.”—

In the illustration of this part of my subject, I have been much indebted to the excellent Sermons of the Bishop of London, on the Christian doctrine of Redemption : and also to the sixth Letter of H. Taylor’s Ben Mordecai’s Apology—a work, which though it contains much of what must be pronounced to be erroneous doctrine, is nevertheless, in such parts as do not take their complexion from the tinge of the author's peculiar opinions, executed with acuteness, learning, and research.

NO. VII. — DEISTICAL REASONING INSTANCED IN CHUBB.

PAGE 10. (§)—The objection stated in the page here referred to, is urged by Chubb, in his reasoning on Redemption.

The species of argument here employed, is a favourite one with this deistical writer. He applies it on another occasion, to establish a conclusion, no less extraordinary, than that the conversion of the Jews or Heathens to Christianity was a matter of little consequence, either as to the favour of God, or their own future safety; for, adds he, IF they were virtuous and good men, they were secure without such conversion; and IF they were bad vicious men, they were not secured by it !!! (Posthumous Works, vol. 2. p. 33.) Thus with the simple apparatus of an IF and a DILEMMA, was this acute reasoner able, on all occasions, to subvert any part of the system of revelation against which he chose to direct his attacks. The ΔΟΣ ΠΟΥ ΣΤΩ was never wanting to this moral Archimedes; and the fulcrum and two-forked lever were always ready at hand, to aid the designs of the logical mechanician.

Yet this man was one of the enlightened in his day. And even at the present time, there is good reason to think, that he is held in no small estimation, by those, who claim to be distinguished by that appellation, amongst the professors of Christianity. For in the treatises of Unitarian and other philosophic Christians of these later times, we find the arguments and opinions of this writer plentifully scattered; and at the same time all ostentatious display, of the source, from which they are derived, most carefully avoided:—circumstances, from which their serious reverence of the author, and the solid value they attach to his works, may reasonably be inferred.

Now, as this is one of the oracles, from which these illuminating teachers derive their lights, (without however confessing it,) it may afford some satisfaction to the reader, who may not have misemployed time in attempting to wade through the swamp of muddy metaphysics which he has left behind him, to have a short summary of his notions concerning Christianity laid before him.

Having altogether rejected the Jewish revelation, and pronounced the New Testament to be a “fountain of confusion and contradiction;” and having consequently affirmed every appeal to Scripture to be “a certain way to perplexity and dissatisfaction, but not to find out the truth:” he recommends our return from all these absurdities to “that prior rule of action, that eternal and invariable rule of right and wrong, as to an infallible guide, and as the solid ground of our peace and safety.” Accordingly, having himself returned to this infallible guide, he is enabled to make these wonderful discoveries—1. That there is no particular providence; and that, consequently, any dependance on Providence, any trust in God, or resignation to his will, can be no part of religion; and, that the idea of application to God for his assistance, or prayer in any view, has no foundation in reason. 2. That we have no reason to pronounce the soul of man to be immaterial, or that it will not perish with the body. 3. That if ever we should suppose a future state in which man shall be accountable, yet the judgment, which shall take place in that state, will extend but to a small part of the human race, and but to a very few of the actions which he may perform: to such alone, for example, as affect the public weal.

Such are the results of reason triumphing over Scripture: and such is the wisdom of man when it opposes itself to the wisdom of God!—Yet this strange and unnatural blasphemer of divine truth declares, that the work, which conveys to the world the monstrous productions of insanity and impiety above cited, (and these are but a small portion of the entire of that description,) he had completed in the decline of life, with the design to leave to mankind “a valuable legacy,” conducing to their general happiness. The reader will hardly be surprised, after what has been said, to learn, that the same infallible guide, which led this maniac to revile the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, and to condemn the Apostles and first publishers of Christianity as blunderers and impostors, prompted him at the same time to speak with commendation of the religion of † MAHOMET. “Whether the Maho-

† It deserves to be noticed, that a complacency for the religion of Mahomet, is a character, by which the liberality of the Socinian or Unitarian is not less distinguished, than that of the Deist. The reason assigned for this by Mr. Van Mildert is a just one. Mahometanism is admired by both, because it sets aside those distinguishing doctrines of the Gospel, the divinity of Christ, and the sacrifice upon the Cross; and prepares the way for what the latter are pleased to dignify with the title of Natural Religion, and the former with that of Rational Christianity.—Van Mildert's Boyle Lect. vol. i. p. 208. The same writer also truly remarks, (p. 202.) that, besides exhibiting a strange compound of Heathen and Jewish errors, the code of Mahomet comprizes almost every heterodox opinion, that has ever been entertained respecting the Christian faith.

Indeed the decided part, which the Unitarians have heretofore taken with the Prophet of Mecca, seems not to be sufficiently adverted to at the present day. The curious reader, if he will turn to Mr. Leslie's Theolog. Works, vol. i. p. 207, will not be a little entertained to see conveyed, in a solemn address from the English Unitarians to the Mahometan ambassador of Morocco, in the reign of Charles the second, a cordial approbation of Mahomet and metan revelation be of a divine original or not, there seems (says he) to be a plausible pretence, arising from the circumstances of things, for stamping a divine character upon it!!!—

the Coran. The one is said to have been raised up by God, to scourge the idolizing Christians, whilst the other is spoken of as a precious record of the true faith. Mahomet they represent to be “a preacher of the Gospel of Christ;” and they describe themselves to be his “fellow champions for the truth.” The mode of warfare they admit, indeed, to be different; but the object contended for they assert to be the same. “We, with our Unitarian brethren, have been in all ages exercised, to defend with our pens the faith of one supreme God; as he hath raised your Mahomet to do the same with the sword, as a scourge on those idolizing Christians.” (p. 209.) Leslie, upon a full and deliberate view of the case, admits the justice of the claim set up by the Unitarians to be admitted to rank with the followers of Mahomet; pronouncing the one to have as good a title to the appellation of Christians as the other. (p. 337.) On a disclosure by Mr. Leslie, of the attempt which had thus been made by the Socinians, to form a confederacy with the Mahometans, the authenticity of the address, and the plan of the projected coalition, at the time were strenuously denied. The truth of Mr. Leslie’s statement, however, (of which from the character of the man no doubt could well have been at any time entertained,) has been since most fully and incontrovertibly confirmed.—See Whitaker’s Origin of Arianism, p. 399. Mr. Leslie also shews, that this Unitarian scheme, of extolling Mahometanism as the only true Christianity, continued for a length of time, to be acted on with activity and perseverance. He establishes this at large, by extracts from certain of their publications, in which it is endeavoured to prove, “that Mahomet had

However at other times he seems disposed not to elevate the religion of Mahomet decidedly above that of Christ; for he observes, that “the turning from Mahometanism to Christianity, or from Christianity to Mahometanism, is only laying aside one external form of religion and making use of another, which is of no more real benefit than a man’s changing the colour of his clothes.” His decision upon this point, also, he thinks he can even defend by the authority of St. Peter, who, he says, has clearly given it as his opinion, in Acts x. 34, 35, that all forms of religion are indifferent.

I should not have so long detained my reader with such contemptible or rather pitiable extravagances, but that the specimen they afford of the wild wanderings of reason, when eman-

no other design but to restore the belief of the Unity of God, which at that time was extirpated among the Eastern Christians by the doctrines of the Trinity and Incarnation: that Mahomet meant not, that his religion should be esteemed a new religion, but only the restitution of the true intent of the Christian religion: that the Mahometan learned men call themselves the true disciples of the Messias:” —and, to crown all, “that Mahometanism has prevailed so greatly, not by force and the sword,—but by that one truth in the Coran, the Unity of God.” And, as a just consequence from all this, it is strongly contended, that “the Tartars had acted more rationally in embracing the sect of Mahomet, than the Christian faith of the Trinity, Incarnation, &c.” Leslie, vol. 1. pp. 216, 217.

culated from revelation, may prepare his mind for a juster view of what is called RATIONAL CHRISTIANITY.

NO. VIII.—ON THE CONSISTENCY OF PRAYER WITH THE DIVINE IMMUTABILITY.

PAGE 10. (h)—See Price's Dissertations—2d. Edit. pp. 209, 210. There are some observations of this excellent and serious writer upon the nature of prayer, which are not only so valuable in themselves, but with some extension admit so direct a bearing upon the subject before us, that I cannot resist the desire I feel of laying them before the reader. In answer to the objection derived from the unchangeableness of God, and the conclusion thence deduced that prayer cannot make any alteration in the Deity, or cause him to bestow any blessings which he would not have bestowed without it; this reply is made. If it be in itself proper, that we should humbly apply to God for the mercies we need from him, it must also be proper, that a regard should be paid to such applications; and that there should be a different treatment of those who make them, and those who do not. To argue this as implying changeableness in the Deity, would be extremely absurd: for the unchangeableness of God, when considered in relation to the exertion of his attributes in the government of the world, consists, not in always acting in the same manner, however cases and circumstances may alter; but in always doing what is right, and in adapting his treatment of his intelligent creatures to the variation of their actions, characters and dispositions. If prayer then makes an alteration in the case of the suppliant, as being the discharge of an indispensable duty; what would in truth infer changeableness in God, would be, not his regarding and answering it, but his not doing this. Hence it is manifest, that the notice which he may be pleased to take of our prayers by granting us blessings in answer to them, is not to be considered as a yielding to importunity, but as an instance of rectitude in suiting his dealings with us to our conduct. Nor does it imply that he is backward to do us good, and therefore wants to be solicited to it: but merely that there are certain conditions, on the performance of which the effects of his goodness to us are suspended: that there is something to be done by us before we can be proper objects of his favour; or before it can be fit and consistent with the measures of the divine government to grant us particular benefits. Accordingly, to the species of objection alluded to in page 10, (namely, that our own worthiness or unworthiness, and the determined will of God, must determine how we are to be treated, absolutely, and so as to render prayer altogether unnecessary,) the answer is obvious, that before prayer we may be unworthy; and that prayer may be the very thing that makes us worthy: the act of prayer being itself the very condition, the very circumstance in our characters, that contributes to render us the proper objects of divine regard, and the neglect of it being that which disqualifies us for receiving blessings.

Mr. Wollaston, in his Religion of Nature, (pp. 115, 116.) expresses the same ideas with his usual exact, and (I may here particularly say) mathematical, precision. “The respect or relation, (he observes,) which lies between God, considered as an unchangeable being, and one that is humble, and supplicates, and endeavours to qualify himself for mercy, cannot be the same with that, which lies between the same unchangeable God, and one that is obstinate, and will not supplicate,* or endeavour to qualify himself: that is, the same thing, or being, cannot respect opposite and contradictory characters in the same manner.† It is not in short

* Πως αν εδωη τω προς τας οφμας αυτεξεσιω μη αιτηντι ο διδουσι πεφυκως Θεος. Hierocl.

† This position he exhibits thus, in language which will be intelligible to mathematicians only. “The ratio of G to M+q, is different from that of G to M—q: and yet G remains unaltered.”—To the opponents of the argument, this formula of its exposition will no doubt afford that by our supplications we can pretend to produce any alteration in the Deity, but by an alteration in ourselves we may alter the relation or respect lying between him and us."

The beautiful language of Mrs. Barbauld, upon this subject, I cannot prevail upon myself to leave unnoticed. Having observed upon that high toned philosophy, which would pronounce prayer to be the weak effort of an infirm mind to alter the order of nature and the decrees of providence, in which it rather becomes the wise man to acquiesce with a manly resignation; this elegant writer proceeds to state, that they who cannot boast of such philosophy, may plead the example of him, who prayed, though with meek submission, that the cup of bitterness might pass from him; and who, as the moment of separation approached, interceded for his friends and followers with all the anxiety of affectionate tenderness. But (she adds) we will venture to say, that practically there is no such philosophy.— If prayer were not enjoined for the perfection, it would be permitted to the weakness of our nature. We should be betrayed into it, if we thought it sin; and pious ejaculations would ground rather of jocularly than of conviction. For of men capable of maintaining a contrary opinion, there can be no great hazard in pronouncing, that they are not mathematicians.

escape our lips, though we were obliged to preface them with, God forgive me for praying!—To those (she says) who press the objection, that we cannot see in what manner our prayers can be answered, consistently with the government of the world according to general laws; it may be sufficient to say, that prayer, being made almost an instinct of our nature, it cannot be supposed but that, like all other instincts it has its use: but that no idea can be less philosophical, than one which implies, that the existence of a God who governs the world, should make no difference in our conduct; and few things less probable, than that the child-like submission which bows to the will of a father, should be exactly similar in feature to the stubborn patience which bends under the yoke of necessity. Remarks on Wakefield's Enquiry, p. 11—14. See also the excellent remarks of Doctor Percival to the same purport, cited in the Appendix to these volumes.

NO. IX.—ON THE GRANTING OF THE DIVINE FORGIVENESS THROUGH A MEDIATOR OR INTERCESSOR.

PAGE 12. (i)—See H. Taylor's Ben. Mord. 5th Letter: in which, a number of instances are adduced from the Old Testament, to shew that God's dealing with his creatures is of the nature here described. Thus we find, that when God had declared, that he would destroy the entire nation of Israel, for their idolatry at Horeb, (Numb. ch. 14.) and again, for their intended violence against Caleb and Joshua, (Deut. ch. 9.) yet upon the intercession of Moses, he is said to have forgiven them. In like manner for the sake of ten righteous persons, he would have spared Sodom. (Gen. xviii. 32.) In remembrance of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and for their sakes, he is represented, as being merciful to their posterity. (Gen. xxvi. 24).—He forgave Abimelech also upon the prayer of Abraham, (Gen. xx. 7.) and the friends of Job, upon the solicitation of that patriarch, (Job xlii. 10.):—and, what renders these two last instances particularly strong, is, that whilst he declares the purpose of forgiveness, he at the same time expressly prescribes the mediation, by which it was to be obtained. To quote more of the numerous instances, which the Old Testament supplies on this head, must be unnecessary. What has been urged, will enable us to form a true judgment of that extraordinary position, on which Dr. Priestley relies not a little, (Hist. of Cor. vol. 1. p. 156.) viz. that “the declarations of Divine Mercy are made without reserve or limitation to the truly penitent, through all the books of Scripture, without the most distant hint of any regard being had to the sufferings or merit of any being whatever."

Very different indeed were the sentiments of the pious writer referred to in the last number. He not merely admits the contrary of this position to be founded in the facts of revelation; but he maintains the abstract reasonableness of the principle, with a force and feeling, that must render his remarks upon this head particularly acceptable to the reader. If it be asked, he says, what influence our prayers can have upon the state of others; what benefit they can derive from our intercessions; or whether we can conceive, that God, like weak men, can be persuaded by the importunity of one person to bestow upon another blessings which he would not else have bestowed: the proper answer is to be derived from the consideration, that it is by no means necessary to suppose, that the treatment which beings shall receive, depends, in all cases, solely, on what they are in themselves. This, without doubt, is what the universal Governor, chiefly regards; but it is not all. And though there are some benefits of such a nature, that no means can obtain them for beings who have not certain qualifications, there are other benefits which one being may obtain for another, or for which he may be indebted entirely to the kind offices of his fellow-creatures. An advantage may become proper to be granted to another, in consequence of some circumstances he may be in, or some relations in which he may stand to others, which abstracted from such circumstances and relations, would not have been proper. Nothing more frequently happens in the common course of events.

The whole scheme of nature seems, indeed, to be contrived on purpose in such a manner, as that beings might have it in their power in numberless ways, to bless one another. And one great end of the precarious and mutually dependent condition of men, appears plainly to be, that they might have room and scope for the exercise of the beneficent affections. From this constitution of things it is, that almost all our happiness is conveyed to us, not immediately from the hands of God, but by the instrumentality of our fellow beings, or through them as the channels of his beneficence, in such a sense, that had it not been for their benevolence and voluntary agency, we should have for ever wanted the blessings we enjoy.

Now with respect to prayer, he asks, Why may not this be one thing that may alter a case, and be a reason with the divine Being for shewing favour? Why by praying for one another, may we not, as in many other ways, be useful to one another? Why may not the universal Father, in consideration of the humble and benevolent intercessions of some of his children for others, be pleased often, in the course of his providence, to direct events for the advantage of the persons interceded for, in a manner that otherwise would not have been done?— No truly benevolent and pious man (he adds) can help lifting up his heart to the Deity in behalf of his fellow-creatures. No one whose breast is properly warmed with kind wishes to his brethren about him, and who feels within himself earnest desires to do them all possible good, can avoid offering up his kind wishes and desires to the common benefactor and ruler, who knows what is best for every being, and who can make those we love infinitely happy. In reality, (he contends) supplications to the Deity for our friends and kindred, and all in whose welfare we are concerned, are no less natural than supplications for ourselves. And are they not (he demands) also reasonable? What is there in them, that is not worthy the most exalted benevolence? May it not be fit, that a wise and good being should pay a regard to them? And may not the regarding and answering them, and in general, granting blessings to some on account of the virtue of others, be a proper method of encouraging and honouring virtue, and of rewarding the benevolence of beings to one another? Perhaps, (he adds) there may not be a better way of encouraging righteousness in the creation, than by making it as much as possible the cause of happiness, not only to the agent himself, but to all connected with him: since there is no virtuous being, who would not, in many circumstances, chuse to be rewarded, with a grant of blessings to his fellow-beings, rather than to himself.

That our prayers for others may be attended with beneficial effects upon their condition, he considers also to be a prevailing sentiment: otherwise wherefore should we feel ourselves impelled to offer them? Our immediate view in praying must be to obtain what we pray for. This, which is true as applied to prayers on our own behalf, must be also true of our supplications for others. We cannot mean, in addressing to the Deity our desires for others, merely to obtain some benefit to ourselves. And this in itself proves, he adds, that the effect of prayer is not merely to be estimated by its tendency to promote our moral and religious improvement.

At the same time, I cannot but lay before the reader the edifying and delightful representation, given by the author, in another place, of the beneficial influence of intercessionary prayer on the mind of him who offers it. "No one can avoid feeling how happy an effect this must have in sweetening our tempers, in reconciling us to all about us, and causing every unfriendly passion to die away within us. We cannot offer up prayers to God for our fellow-men, without setting them before our minds in some of the most engaging lights possible; as partaking of the same nature with ourselves, liable to the same wants and sufferings, and in the same helpless circumstances; as children of the same father, subjects of the same all-wise government, and heirs of the same hopes. He who prays for others with understanding and sincerity, must see himself on the same level with them; he must be ready to do them all the good in his power; he must be pleased with whatever happiness they enjoy; he can do nothing to lessen their credit or comfort; and fervent desires will naturally rise within him while thus engaged, that his own breast may be the seat of all those good dispositions and virtues, which he prays that they may be blessed with. Resentment and envy can never be indulged by one, who, whenever he finds himself tempted to them, has recourse to this duty, and sets himself to recommend to the divine favour the persons who excite within him these passions. No desire of retaliation or revenge, nothing of unpeaceableness, ill nature, or haughtiness, can easily shew itself in a heart kept under this guard and discipline. How is it possible to use him ill, for whom we are constant advocates with God? How excellent a parent or friend is he likely to make, who always remembers before God the concerns and interests of his children and friends, in the same manner that he remembers his own? Is there a more rational way of expressing benevolence than this? or a more effectual way of promoting and enlarging it? Nothing is more desirable or more delightful than to feel ourselves continually under the power of kind affections to all about us. Would we be thus happy? Would we have our hearts in a constant state of love and good-will? Would we have every tender sentiment strong and active in our breasts?—Let us be constant and diligent in this part of devotion, and pray continually for others, as we do for ourselves.” (Price’s Four Dissertations, pp. 207, 221—227, 237—239.)

Such was the language of a man, who, whilst (unlike Dr. Priestley and his Unitarian associates) he really possessed, and by the habits of his studies daily strengthened, the powers of accurate thinking, had not rationalized away those just and natural sentiments, which belong to the truly religious character, and which, whilst the highest exercises of mere intellect cannot reach, its soundest decisions cannot but approve. At the same time, how deeply is it to be deplored, that, in certain of his theological opinions, such a man should have departed widely from the truth of Scripture!

I have willingly permitted myself in this extract to wander beyond what the immediate subject demanded: because amidst the thorny mazes of polemics, the repose and refreshment which these flowers of genuine piety present, would, I apprehended, afford to the reader a satisfaction not less than they had yielded to myself.

NO. X.—ON UNITARIANS; OR RATIONAL DIS-SENTERS.

PAGE 11. (k) It is obvious, that the Sect, to which I here allude, is that known by the title of UNITARIANS: a title, by which it is meant modestly to insinuate, that they are the only worshippers of One God. From a feeling similar to that, which has given birth to this denomination, they demand also, to be distinguished from the other Non-conformists, by the appellation of Rational Dissenters.

Mr. Howes has observed, (Critical Observ. vol. iv. p. 17.) that the term Unitarian, has been used with great vagueness, by the very writers, who arrogate the name: being applied by some to a great variety of sects, Arians, Ebi- onites, Theodotians, Sabellians and Socinians; to any sect, in short, which has pretended to preserve the unity of the Deity, better than the Trinitarians according to the council of Nice: whilst by others, and particularly by Dr. Priest- ley, it is attributed exclusively to those who maintain the mere humanity of Christ. On this account, Mr. Howes proposed to substitute the word Humanist, as more precisely expressing the chief principle of the sect intended: and this word he afterwards exchanged for Humanitarian, Mr. Hobhouse and other Unitarians having adopted that appellation. (Crit. Obs. vol. iv. p. 91.)—However as I find the latest writers of this description prefer the denomination of Unitarian, I have complied with their wishes, in adopting this term throughout the present work; perfectly aware, at the same time, of the impropriety of its appropriation, but being unwilling to differ with them merely about names, where so much attention is demanded by things.

For a full account of the doctrines of this new Sect, (for new it must be called, notwithstanding Doctor Priestley's laboured, but unsubstantial, examination of "Early Opinions,") the reader may consult the Theological Repository, the various Theological productions of Doctor Priestley, and particularly Mr. Belsham's Review of Mr. Wilberforce's Treatise. Indeed this last publication presents, on the whole, so extraordinary a system; and conveys so comprehensive a view of all the principles and consequences of the Unitarian scheme, not to be found in any other work of so small a compass; that I think it may not be unacceptable, to subjoin to these pages, a brief abstract of it as described by the author. A summary of the tenets of this enlightened sect, may furnish matter of speculation, not merely curious but instructive, to those who are not yet tinctured with its principles; and to those who are, it may perhaps suggest a salutary warning, by shewing it in all its frightful consequences.—Unitarianism, it is true, has not yet made its way into this Country, in any digested shape; but wherever there are found to prevail, a vain confidence in the sufficiency of human reason, and a consequent impatience of authority and controul, with a desire to reject received opinions, and to fritter away by subtle distinctions, plain and established precepts; there the soil is prepared for its reception, and the seed is already sown.

NO. XI.—ON THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN UNITARIANS AND SOCINIANS.

PAGE 12. (1) The doctrine stated in the text is that maintained by all the Socinian writers. It may be found so laid down (Theol. Rep. vol. i.) in the first article, written by Dr. Priestley, under the title of Clemens. It is however to be noted, that Doctor Priestley, his follower Mr. Belsham, and others of the same Theological opinions, disclaim the title of Socinian; and desire to be distinguished by that of Unitarian, for the reason assigned in the preceding number.

Mr. Belsham goes so far as to say, (Review, &c. p. 227,) that his “ Creed is as far removed from that of Socinus, as it is from the peculiar doctrines of Mr. Wilberforce.” Indeed, to do Socinus justice, it must be admitted, that the Creed of the Unitarian differs materially from his. He had not reached the acmè of modern illumination. He had not sufficient penetration, to discern the various mistakes in the application of Scripture, and the numerous errors in reasoning, committed by the Evangelists and Apostles, which have been detected and dragged to light, by the sagacious Unitarian. He had not discovered, that Christ was the human offspring of Joseph and Mary. He had not divested our Lord, of his regal, as well as his sacerdotal character, and reduced him to the condition of a mere Prophet. He had weakly imagined, that by virtue of his regal office, Christ possessed the power of delivering his people from the punishment of their sins. But Doctor Priestley has rectified this error. In his Hist. of Cor. (vol. i. p. 272.) he expressly points out the difference between himself and Socinus, on this head. “ It immediately follows,” he says, “ from his (Socinus’s) principles, that Christ being only a man, though ever so innocent, his death could not, in any proper sense of the word, atone for the sins of other men. He was, however, far from abandoning the doctrine of Redemption, in the Scripture sense of the word, that is, of our deliverance from the guilt of sin, by his Gospel, as promoting repentance and reformation; and from the punishment due to sin, by his power of giving eternal life to all that obey him.—But indeed, if God himself freely forgives the sins of men, upon repentance, there could be no occasion, properly speaking, for any thing farther being done, to avert the punishment with which they had been threatened.”

This passage, whilst it marks the distinction between the Socinian and the Unitarian, fully opens up the scheme of the latter. But on this system, it may be curious to enquire, in what light the death of our blessed Lord is represented. Dr. Priestley (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 39.) gives us this information.—“Christ being a man, who suffered and died in the best of causes, there is nothing so very different in the occasion and manner of his death, from that of others who suffered and died after him in the same cause of Christianity, but that their sufferings and death may be considered in the same light with his.”—This extraordinary assertion exactly agrees with what is recorded of Solomon Eccles, a great preacher and prophet of the Quakers; who expressly declares, “that the blood of Christ was no more than the blood of any other Saint.” (Leslie’s works, fol. vol. ii. p. 195.)

Thus strangely do the philosophy of Doctor Priestley, and the fanaticism of the Quaker, concur with that, which both would pronounce to be the gross absurdity of Popery. For if the death of Christ be viewed in the same light, with the death of any other martyr, the invocation of the Popish Saints may appear a consequence not so revolting to Christian piety. That the lines of error, in their manifold directions, should sometimes intersect, if not for a certain length of way coincide, is not however matter of surprise.

But, the death of Christ being treated in this manner, by Doctor Priestley and his Unitarian followers, one is naturally led to enquire what their notions are of his state, subsequent to his resurrection. Mr. Belsham (Review, &c. p. 74.) gives us satisfaction on this head. The Unitarians, he says, here entirely differ from the Socinians: for that the latter hold the "unscriptural and most incredible notion, that since his resurrection he has been advanced to the government of the Universe: but a consistent Unitarian, acknowledging Jesus as a man in all respects like to his brethren, regards his kingdom as entirely of a spiritual nature." We are not, however, to suppose our blessed Lord altogether banished from existence; for this gentleman admits again, (p. 85) that he is "now alive" somewhere, "and without doubt employed in offices the most honourable and benevolent;”—in such, of course, as any of his brother-men, to whom he is above described as in all respects similar, might be engaged.—On this, and other such wild blasphemies of this sect, as represented by Mr. Belsham, see the Appendix.

NO. XII.—ON THE CORRUPTION OF MAN'S NATURAL STATE.

PAGE 14. (m) They who may wish to see this subject extensively treated, will find it amply discussed, in Leland's work on the Advantage and Necessity of the Christian Revelation. In Mr. Wilberforce's PRACTICAL VIEW also, we meet with a description of the state of unassisted nature, distinguished not less, unhappily, by its truth, than by its eloquence.

After a forcible enumeration of the gross vices, into which the heathen world, both ancient and modern, had been sunk; and this not only amongst the illiterate and the vulgar, but also amongst the learned and the refined, even to the decent Virgil and the philosophic Cicero; he proceeds, in the following animated tone, to examine the state of morals among those who have been visited by the lights of the Gospel.

“But,” says he, “you give up the heathen nations as indefensible; and wish rather to form your estimate of man, from a view of countries, which have been blessed with the light of revelation.—True it is, and with joy let us record the concession, Christianity has set the general tone of morals much higher than it was ever found in the pagan world. She has every where improved the character, and multiplied the comforts of society; particularly to the poor and the weak, whom from the beginning she professed to take under her special patronage. Like her divine Author, “who sends his rain on the evil and on the good,” she showers down unnumbered blessings on thousands who profit from her bounty, while they forget or deny her power, and set at nought her authority. Yet, even in this more favoured situation, we shall discover too many lamentable proofs of the depravity of man. Nay, this depravity will now become even more apparent and less deniable. For what bars does it not now overleap? Over what motives is it not now victorious? Consider well the superior light and advantages which we enjoy, and then appreciate the superior obligations which are imposed on us. Consider well,” &c.

“Yet in spite of all our knowledge, thus powerfully enforced and pressed home upon us, how little has been our progress in virtue? It has been by no means such as to prevent the adoption, in our days, of various maxims of antiquity, which when well considered, too clearly establish the depravity of man.” Having adduced several instances in proof of this assertion, he thus proceeds; “ But surely to any who call themselves Christians, it may be justly urged as an astonishing instance of human depravity, that we ourselves, who enjoy the full light of revelation; to whom God has vouchsafed such clear discoveries of what it concerns us to know of his being and attributes; who profess to believe that in him we live, and move, and have our being; that to him we owe all the comforts we here enjoy, and the offer of eternal glory purchased for us by the atoning blood of his own Son; that we, thus loaded with mercies, should every one of us be continually chargeable with forgetting his authority, and being ungrateful for his benefits; with slighting his gracious proposals, or receiving them at best but heartlessly and coldly.”

“ But to put the question concerning the natural depravity of man to the severest test: take the best of the human species, the watchful, diligent, self-denying Christian, and let him decide the controversy; and that, not by inferences drawn from the practices of a thoughtless and dissolute world, but by an appeal to his personal experience. Go with him into his closet, ask him his opinion of the corruption of the heart; and he will tell you, that he is deeply sensible of its power, for that he has learned it from much self-observation, and long acquaintance with the workings of his own mind. He will tell you, that every day strengthens this conviction; yea, that hourly he sees fresh reason to deplore his want of simplicity in intention, his infirmity of purpose, his low views, his selfish unworthy desires, his backwardness to set about his duty, his languor and coldness in performing it: that he finds himself obliged continually to confess, that he feels within him two opposite principles, and that he cannot do the things that he would. He cries out in the language of the excellent Hooker, "The little fruit which we have in holiness, it is, God knoweth, corrupt and unsound: we put no confidence at all in it, we challenge nothing in the world for it, we dare not call God to reckoning, as if we had him in our debt books; our continual suit to him is, and must be, to bear with our infirmities, and pardon our offences!" (Wilberforce's Practical View, p. 28—37.)

Such is the view which a pious and impressive writer has given, of what, all who reflect must acknowledge, to be the true condition of man. Another writer, not less pious and impressive, (Mrs. Hannah More,) has, with her usual powers of eloquence, presented the same picture of the moral and religious history of the world, in her admirable Strictures on the mo- dern System of Female Education. To observations similar to those of Mr. Wilberforce, on the doctrine of human depravity, she adds this remark. "Perhaps one reason why the faults of the most eminent saints are recorded in Scripture, is, to add fresh confirmation to this doctrine. If Abraham, Moses, Noah, Elijah, David, and Peter sinned, who, shall we presume to say, has escaped the universal taint?" (H. More's works, vol. iv. pp. 330, 331.)

How easily is this question answered by the follower of Priestley:—or I may add, (strange as the combination may appear,) of Wesley! The former produces his philosopher, the latter his saint, in refutation of such unworthy and disparaging notions of human nature. They differ indeed in one material point. The one contends, that by his own virtuous resolutions he can extricate himself from vicious propensities and habits; whilst the other is proud to admit, that the divine favour has been peculiarly exerted in his behalf, to rescue him from his sins. The one denies, that he was ever subject to an innate depravity: the other confesses that he was, boasts even of its inveteracy, but glories that he has been perfectly purified from its stains. But both are found to agree most exactly, in that vain self-complacency, which exults in the reflexion that they “are not as * other men are;” and in the arrogant presumption, that they are lifted above that corruption of nature from which the more humble and more deserving Christian feels him-

* The contemptuous language, which the over weening Methodist is too apt to employ, with respect to all who are not within his sanctified pale, but more especially with respect to the Clergy of the establishment, affords but too strong a justification of this charge as it applies to him. The clergy are uniformly with religionists of this description, “dumb dogs,” “watchmen who sleep upon their posts,” “priests of Baal,” “wolves in sheep’s clothing,” &c. &c. Indeed Mr. Whitefield informs us in his works, (vol. iv. p. 67.) that “Mr. Wesley thought meanly of Abraham, and, he believes, of David also:” whilst, of Mr. Wesley himself we are told, that “wherever he went, he was received as an Apostle;” and that “in the honour due to Moses he also had a share, being placed at the head of a great people by him who called them,” &c. (Hampson’s life of Wesley, vol. iii. p. 35. Coke’s life of Wesley, p. 520.)—Mr. Wesley has taken care to let mankind know, that Methodism “is the only religion worthy of God:” (Hamps. vol. iii. p. 30.) and the miracles, which repeatedly attested his divine mission for the propagation of this religion, he has most copiously recorded throughout his Journals.—Whoever wishes to form a just idea of the pernicious extravagances of this arch enthusiast and of his followers, will find ample satisfaction in Bishop Lavington’s Enthusiasm of Methodists and Papists compared, (a book, which B. Warburton, in one of his private letters to his friend Hurd, very unfairly describes, as “a bad copy of Stillingfleet’s famous book of the Fanaticism of the Church of Rome,”) and in the later publication of Nott’s Religious Enthusiasm considered.

self not to be exempt. In the philosophising Christian all this is natural and consistent. But in the Methodist, (I speak of the Arminian Methodist, or follower of Wesley,) it is altogether at variance with the doctrines which he professes to maintain. Accuracy of reasoning, however, is not among the distinctive marks of this latter description of religionists. A warm fancy, with a weak intellect; strong passions, and vehement conceit, almost always go to the composition of the character. That such qualities should find many minds of congenial aptitude, is a thing not to be wondered at. And therefore, that this mixture of fanaticism, hypocrisy, vanity and ignorance, should be widely spreading in both * countries, is perfectly natural.

* At the annual conference of the preachers in the Wesley connexion, held at Bristol in July 1808, the number of Methodists of that connexion in Great Britain and Ireland alone, was stated to exceed 151,000, that is, more by above 8000 than in the year preceding.—At the succeeding annual conference, which took place at Manchester, in the July of the last year, the number of the same connexion, throughout the two islands, has been stated to have received within the year, an encrease of nearly 7000, (of which the encrease in Ireland alone has been 1300) making the whole to amount very nearly to 158,000; whilst the numbers of the society in the West Indies and America have at the same meeting been stated to exceed 173,000.

It is however to be lamented, that such a mischievous corruption of true religion should receive countenance from any of its real friends: and it is matter equally of surprize and concern, that a system, which no longer covertly, but openly and avowedly, works in continued hostility to the established religion, has not met with more effectual resistance from those who may be supposed to take an interest in the well-being of the establishment. On the contrary, examples are not wanting of cases, in which the clergy have been set aside in the work of religious instruction; whilst men, who uphold the Wesleyan chimera of perfection, who openly reject the * Liturgy and Articles, and oppose

* The treatment which the Liturgy and the Articles have experienced from Mr. Wesley, is, I apprehend, very little understood by the generality of those, who are disposed to look with complacency upon the sect of which he has been the founder. Professing to adopt the Liturgy of the Church of England, he has framed one for his followers, differing from it in many and essential particulars. He confesses indeed that he has made some slight alterations; which he enumerates in such a way, as would naturally induce the supposition, that the difference is altogether unimportant: whilst, in truth, he has not only newly modified the common prayer, and nearly abolished the whole of the baptismal office; but, besides mutilating above sixty of the Psalms, has discarded thirty-four others, and newly rendered many of the remainder. Of the Psalms, which he has discarded, six at least are admitted to be eminently prophetic of our Saviour, of his incarnation, his sufferings, the doctrines of the Established Church, have been deemed fit objects of preference to the recognized religious teachers of the land.

and his ascension; whilst the reason assigned for the expurgation is, their being "improper for the mouth of a Christian congregation!!" But this is not all, the Rubrick and the appointed lessons are in most places altered; and the Catechism, and the two Creeds (the Nicene and Athanasian) totally discarded. Of these last mentioned alterations, it is also particularly to be observed, that Mr. Wesley gave to his followers no notice whatever; whilst the former were represented by him as of a nature altogether unimportant: so that the ignorant amongst his adherents were led to imagine, that they were not materially departing from the forms of the establishment, when in truth they were altogether drawn away from the offices of the Church.—To complete the whole, Mr. Wesley provided his Communion also with a new set of Articles, reducing the number from thirty-nine to twenty-five; and making such changes, in those which he retained, as he found most convenient. Not to dwell too long upon this subject, suffice it to adduce two instances of omitted Articles, from which the spirit that governed the whole may easily be divined. The eighteenth Article, which pronounces, that "Eternal salvation is to be obtained only by the name of Christ;" and the fifteenth, which asserts, "that Christ alone was without sin," are two of those, which the founder of Methodism has declared to be unfit objects of a Christian's belief. Thus it appears, that the Socinian is not the only sectary that would degrade the dignity of Christ.—Such are the people from whom certain weak members of the Establishment apprehend no mischief.—On the points which have been here noticed, see particularly Nott's Relig. Enth. p. 150—167.

Against abuses such as these, and particularly against the open outrages upon decency and upon the rights of the establishment, of which many of this wild and fantastic sect have been guilty, I am happy to say, that some respectable members of the national church have lifted their voices in both countries. Amongst these I allude with particular pleasure to my respected friend and brother academic, Dr. Hales: and I allude to him the more willingly, not only because he has with much ability and good temper combated and confuted the extravagant dogmas, of sinless perfection, and miraculous impulses, which are the distinguishing tenets of this sect; but because he has, in opposition to their wild rhapsodies, exhibited such a portrait of the true Christian, and of the nature of that perfection which it is permitted him in this life to attain, as is strictly warranted by Scripture, and highly edifying to contemplate. I therefore here subjoin it, both as being naturally connected with the present subject, and as being calculated to afford satisfaction and improvement to the Christian reader.

“The perfect Christian, according to the representation of holy writ, is he, who as far as the infirmity of his nature will allow, aspires to universal holiness of life; uniformly and habitually endeavouring to ‘stand perfect and complete in all the will of God,’ and to ‘fulfil all righteousness,' in humble imitation of his Redeemer: who daily and fervently prays for 'increase of faith,' like the Apostles themselves; and strenuously labours to 'add to his faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity.' Such is the assemblage of virtues necessary to constitute the character of the perfect Christian; ever aiming at, though never attaining to, absolute or sinless perfection, in this present state of trial, probation, and preparation for a better; and meekly resting all his hopes of favour and acceptance with God, not on his own defective and imperfect righteousness, but on 'the free grace of God, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:' 'for by grace we are saved through faith, and this not of ourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, that no one should boast.'"—Methodism Inspected, pp. 30, 31.—This is the language of reason and of * Scripture, by which

* Doctor Stack also uses a language of like sobriety and scriptural correctness, in those passages of his very useful Lectures on the Acts, and on the Romans, in which he has occasion to speak of the influence of the Holy Spirit. See particularly pp. 35, 36, of the former work, and p. 148—150, of the latter. Attend also to the excellent observations of the B. of Lincoln, on the degree of purity attainable by the Christian, and the nature of the endeavours the Christian, though ever aspiring to a higher and a better nature, is still reminded of that nature which belongs to him, and against the infirmities of which he can never either relax in vigilance, or remit in exertion.

How strongly contrasted with such language are the dogmas alluded to in page 163, and the authorities adduced in their support! That the nature of those dogmas, and the extent to which they are maintained, may be the better understood, I must here detain the reader with a few passages from the writings of Mr. Wesley. As possessing the advantages of education, talents, and knowledge of mankind, in a degree which places him much above the level of those, who have succeeded him in the Methodist Ministry, he may well be supposed not to have propounded the opinions of the sect in a shape more extravagant than that, in which they are embraced by his followers. And first, on the subject of miraculous manifestations and impulses in the forgiveness of sins and assurance of salvation, he tells us: "God does now as aforetime give remissions of sin, and the gift of the Holy Ghost to us; and that always suddenly, as far as I have known, and often in dreams, and in the visions of God." (Hampson's Life of Wesl. ii. 81)—Again: "I am one of many witnesses of this matter of fact, that God does now make good this his promise daily, very frequently during a representation (how made I know not, but not to the outward eye,) of Christ, either hanging on the cross, or standing on the right hand of God." (Hamps. ii. 55.)—Again: "I saw the fountain opened in his side—we have often seen Jesus Christ crucified, and evidently set forth before us." (B. Lavingt. vol. i. part. i. p. 51)—And Coke, in his Life of Wesley, says, that "being in the utmost agony of mind, there was clearly represented to him Jesus Christ pleading for him with God the Father, and gaining a free pardon for him."—Secondly, as to the tenet of perfection, Mr. Wesley affords us the following ample explanation.—"They" (the purified in heart) "are freed from self will: as desiring nothing, no not for a moment, but the holy and perfect will of God: neither supplies in want, nor ease in pain, nor life, nor death, but continually cry in their inmost soul, Father, thy will be done." "They are freed from evil thoughts,* so that they can-

which he is to make after perfection. Elem. of Christ. Theol. vol. ii. p. 285.

* That he, who could use such language as this, would feel it necessary to reject the fifteenth Article of the Church, as the reader is already apprised Mr. Wesley did, will not appear surprising on a perusal of that article.—"Christ, in the truth of our nature, was made like unto us in all things, sin only except, from which he was clearly void, both in his flesh and in his spirit. He came to be a lamb without spot, who, by sacrifice of himself once made should take away the sins of the world: and sin, as St. John saith, was not in him. But all we the rest, although baptized and not enter into them, no not for an instant. Afore-time, (i. e. when only justified) when an evil thought came in, they looked up, and it vanished away: but now it does not come in; there being no room for this in a soul, which is full of God.

born again in Christ, yet offend in many things: and if we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Such is the doctrine of the Established Church; and such is the direct contrary of the doctrine, which Mr. Wesley and his followers hold upon the subject of this article: for which reason, they have with perfect consistency rejected it from their code of Christian belief. And, for the same reason, the cry of the party is every where loudly raised, against every work, that intimates the corruption of man's nature, in the language of the article.

As to the rejection of the Eighteenth Article, Mr. Wesley's language has not been so explicit, as to enable us to pronounce upon the precise ground of that rejection, with perfect certainty. But when we consider, that in that article there is contained, a condemnation of the assertion, "that every man shall be saved by the law or sect which he professeth;" and that it is at the same time affirmed, that "Holy Scripture doth set out unto us, only the name of Jesus Christ, whereby men must be saved:" and when at the same time we recollect, that "the name of Jesus Christ" implies certain belief and doctrines respecting the nature of the Saviour and the religion which he has taught; whilst Mr. Wesley considers doctrines, or right opinions, to be of little value, and holds the religious feelings which distinguish the true Methodist to be the only sure pledge and passport of salvation:—when we compare these things together, we seem to run no great risque in concluding, that this article was condemned by the founder of Metho.

They are freed from wanderings in prayer: they have an unction from the Holy one, which abideth in them, and teacheth them every hour what they shall do, and what they shall speak.” —(Pref. to 2d vol. of Wesley's hymns, Hamps. iii. 52, and Coke's life of Wes. pp. 278, 344).

These extracts from the writings of the father of Methodism, fairly open up to us the two great fundamental doctrines of the sect: viz. 1. That the assurances of forgiveness and of salvation, arise from a sudden infusion of divine feeling, conveyed by some sensible and miraculous manifestation of the spirit: and 2d. That the true believer attains in this life such perfection, as to be altogether free from sin, and even from the possibility of sin. Holding such doctrines, it is not at all wonderful that the Wesleyan Methodist is indifferent about every other. Mr. Wesley fairly says upon the subject of doctrines, “I will not quarrel with you about any opinion: believe them true or false!” (Third Appeal, p. 135.) In another place, he confesses, “the points we chiefly insisted upon were, that Orthodoxy, or Right Opinions, is, at best a very slender part dism, as clearly marking, that religious opinions were by no means a matter of indifference; that on the contrary just notions concerning Christ were requisite for salvation; and that for the want of these, no association with any particular sect or religious description whatever could make compensation.

of Religion,* if it can be allowed to be any part of it at all!!!—This, it must be admitted, is an excellent expedient for adding to the numbers of the sect. A perfect indifference about

* On this favourite position of Mr. Wesley, Bishop Warburton justly remarks, that here is a complete separation between reason and religion. For when reason is no longer employed to distinguish right from wrong opinions, religion has no further connexion with it. But reason once separated from religion, must not piety degenerate either into nonsense or madness? And for the fruits of grace what can remain but the froth and dregs of enthusiasm and superstition? In the first ages of Christianity, the glory of the Gospel consisted in its being a reasonable service. By this it was distinguished from the several modes of Gentile religion, the essence of which consisted in fanatic raptures and superstitious ceremonies; without any articles of belief or formula of faith: right opinion being, on the principles of the Pagan priesthood, at best, but a very slender part of religion, if any part of it at all. But Christianity arose on different principles. St. Paul considers right opinion as one full third part of religion, where speaking of the three great fundamental principles on which the Christian Church is erected, he makes truth to be one of them. The fruit of the Spirit is in all GOODNESS, RIGHTEOUSNESS, and TRUTH.—So different was St. Paul's idea, from that entertained of Christianity by Mr. Wesley, who comprises all in the new birth, and makes believing to consist entirely in feeling. On the whole, therefore, we may fairly conclude, (with Warburton) that that wisdom which divests Christianity of truth and reason, and resolves its essence rather into mental and spiritual sensations, than tries it by moral demonstration, can never be the wisdom which is from above, whose first characteristic attribute is doctrines, and a strong persuasion that the divine favour is secured, whilst the fancy of each individual is counted to him for faith,—are such recommendations of any form of religion, as can scarcely be resisted. But what can be more mischievous than all this? What more destructive of true religion? The sound principles of Christian Doctrine disparaged, as of no value to the believer: and the serious feelings of Christian Piety caricatured, and thereby brought into general disrepute: whilst the sober and regulated teaching of the national Clergy is treated with contumely and contempt; and separation from the national Church deemed a decisive criterion of godly sincerity!—In the contemplation of such a state of things, it seems as if one were surveying the completion of the following prospective description given to us by Sir Walter Raleigh. “When” says he, “all order, discipline and Church government shall be left to newness of opinion, and men’s fancies; soon after, as many kinds of Religion will spring up as there are parish churches within England; every contempurity. The same writer truly adds, that if Mr. Wesley’s position be well founded, the first Reformers of Religion from the errors of Popery, have much to answer for: who, for the sake of right opinion, at best a slender part of religion, if any part of it at all, occasioned so much turmoil, and so many revolutions in civil as well as in religious systems.—See Warburton’s Principles of Nat. and Rev. Religion, vol. i. p. 263—267.

tious and ignorant person, clothing his fancy with the Spirit of God, and his imagination with the gift of Revelation: insomuch as when the Truth, which is but one, shall appear to the simple multitude, no less variable than contrary to itself, the faith of men will soon after die away by degrees, and all Religion be held in scorn and contempt."—Hist of the World. B. II. ch. v. sect. I.

NO. XIII. — ON THE MISREPRESENTATION OF THE DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT BY UNITARIANS.

PAGE 16. (n)—On this subject Dr. Priestley (Hist. of Cor. vol. i. p. 153.) thus represents the arguments of the Orthodox. "Sin being an offence against an infinite Being, requires an infinite satisfaction, which can only be made by an infinite person; that is, one who is no less than God himself. Christ, therefore, in order to make this infinite satisfaction for the sins of men, must himself be God, equal to God the Father." —With what candour this has been selected, as a specimen of the mode of reasoning, by which the doctrine of Atonement as connected with that of the divinity of Christ, is maintained by the established church, it is needless to remark. That some few indeed have thus argued, is certainly to be admitted and lamented. But how poorly such men have reasoned, it needed not the acuteness of Dr. Priestley to discover. On their own principle, the reply is obvious,—that sin being committed by a finite creature, requires only a finite satisfaction, for which purpose a finite person might be an adequate victim. But the insinuation, that our belief in the divinity of Christ, has been the offspring of this strange conceit, is much more becoming the determined advocate of a favourite cause, than the sober enquirer after truth. Our mode of reasoning is directly the reverse. The Scriptures proclaim the divinity of Christ; and so far are we from inferring this attribute of our Lord from the necessity of an infinite satisfaction, that we infer from it, both the great love of our Almighty Father, who has “spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all;” and the great heinousness of human guilt, for the expiation of which, it was deemed fit that so great a Being should suffer. The decent manner, in which Mr. Belsham has thought proper to represent the orthodox notion of the atonement, is, that man could “not have been saved, unless one God had died, to satisfy the justice, and appease the wrath of another.” (Review, &c. p. 221.) This is language, with which I should not have disgraced my page, but that it may serve to shew how dangerous a thing it is, to open a door to opinions, that can admit of treating subjects the most sacred with a levity, which seems so nearly allied to impiety.

NO. XIV.—ON THE DISRESPECT OF SCRIPTURE MANIFESTED BY UNITARIAN WRITERS.

PAGE 17.(°)—Perhaps I may be charged with having made a distinction in this place, which gives an unfair representation of Unitarians, inasmuch as they also profess to derive their arguments from Scripture. But whether that profession be not intended in mockery, one might be almost tempted to question; when it is found, that in every instance, the doctrine of Scripture is tried by their abstract notion of right, and rejected if not accordant:—when by means of figure and allusion, it is every where made to speak a language, the most repugnant to all fair, critical interpretation; until emptied of its true meaning, it is converted into a vehicle for every fantastic theory, which under the name of rational, they may think proper to adopt:—when in such parts, as propound Gospel truths of a contexture too solid to admit of an escape in figure and allusion, the sacred writers are charged as bunglers, producing “lame accounts, improper quotations, and inconclusive reasonings,” (Dr. Priestley’s 12th Letter to Mr. Burn) and philosophy is consequently called in to rectify their errors:—when one writer of this class (Steinbart) tells us, that

“ the narrations” (in the New Testament) “ true or false, are only suited for ignorant, uncultivated minds, who cannot enter into the evidence of natural religion ;” and again, that “ Moses according to the childish conceptions of the Jews in his days, paints God as agitated by violent affections, partial to one people, and hating all other nations :”—when another, (Semler) remarking on St. Peter’s declaration, that prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, says, that “ Peter speaks here according to the conception of the Jews, and that “ the prophets may have delivered the offspring of their own brains as divine revelations :” (Dr. Erskine’s Sketches and Hints of Ch. Hist. N^o 3. pp. 66. 71.)—when a third (Engedin) speaks of St. John’s portion of the New Testament, as written with “ concise and abrupt obscurity, inconsistent with itself, and made up of allegories ;” and Gagneius glories in having given “ a little light to St. Paul’s darkness, a darkness, as some think, industriously affected :”—when we find Mr. Evanson, one of those able Commentators referred to by Mr. Belsham in his Review, &c. p. 206, assert, (Dissonance, &c. p. i.) that “ the Evangelical histories contain gross and irreconcilable contradictions,” and consequently discard three out of the four, retaining the Gospel of St. Luke only, at the same time drawing his pen over as much of this, as either from its infelicity of style, or other such causes happens not to meet his approbation:—when we find Dr. Priestley, besides his charge against the writers of the New Testament before recited, represent in his letter to Dr. Price, the narration of Moses concerning the creation and the fall of man, as a lame account; and thereby meriting the praise of magnanimity bestowed on him by theologians, equally enlightened:—when finally, not to accumulate instances where so many challenge attention, we find the Gospel openly described by Mr. Belsham, (Review, &c. p. 217.) as containing nothing more than the Deism of the French Theo-Philanthrope, save only the fact of the resurrection of a human being (see Appendix); and when, for the purpose of establishing this, he engages, that the Unitarian writers shall prune down the Scriptures to this moral system and this single fact, by shewing that whatever supports any thing else is either “interpolation, omission, false reading, mistranslation, or erroneous interpretation,” (Review, pp. 206. 217. 272.):—when, I say, all these things are considered, and when we find the Bible thus contemned and rejected by the gentlemen of this new light, and a new and more convenient Gospel carved out for themselves, can the occasional profession of reverence* for Scripture, as the word of God, be treated in any other light, than as a convenient mask, or an insulting sneer?

* The fathers of the Socinian School are as widely distinguished from their followers of the present day, by their

modesty and moderation, as by their learning and their talents. Yet, that it may be the more plainly discerned, how remote the spirit of Socinianism has been at all times, from the reverence due to the authority of Scripture, I here subjoin, in the words of two of their early writers, specimens of the treatment, which the sacred volume commonly receives at their hand.—Faustus Socinus, after pronouncing with sufficient decision against the received doctrine of the Atonement, proceeds to say, “Ego quidem, etiamsi non semel, sed sæpe id in sacris monimentis scriptum extaret; non idcirco tamen ita rem prorsus se habere crederem.” Socin. Opera, tom. ii. p. 204.—And with like determination, Smalcius affirms of the Incarnation; “Credimus, etiamsi non semel atque iterum, sed satis crebro et disertissime scriptum extaret Deum esse hominem factum, multo satius esse, quia hæc res sit absurda, et sanæ rationi plane contraria, et in Deum blasphema, modum aliquem dicendi comminisci, quo ista de Deo dici possint, quam ista simpliciter ita ut verba sonant intelligere.” (Homil. viii. ad cap. 1. Joh.)—Thus it appears from these instances, joined to those which have been adduced above, to those which have been noticed at the end of Number I. and to others of the like nature which might be multiplied from writers of the Socinian School without end; that the most explicit, and precise, and emphatical language, announcing the doctrines which the philosophy of that school condemns, would, to its disciples, be words of no meaning; and the Scripture which adopted such language, but an idle fable. Non persuadebis etiamsi persuaseris, is the true motto of the Unitarian. And the reader, I trust, will not think that I have drawn too strong conclusions upon this subject in the three last pages of the first number, when he finds the proof of what is there advanced strengthening so powerfully as we proceed.

It might be a matter of more than curious speculation, to frame a Bible, according to the modifications of the Unitarian Commentators. The world would then see, after all the due amputations and amendments, to what their respect for the sacred text amounts. Indeed it is somewhat strange, that men so zealous to enlighten and improve the world, have not, long before this, blessed it with so vast a treasure. Can it be, that they think the execution of such a work, would impair their claim to the name of Christians? Or is it rather, that even the Bible so formed, must soon yield to another more perfect, as the still encreasing flood of light poured in new knowledge? That the latter is perhaps the true cause, may be inferred, as well from the known magnanimity of those writers, which cannot be supposed to have stooped to the former consideration, as from Dr. Priestley's own declarations. In his Letters to a Philosophical Unbeliever (Part 2. p. 33—35.) he informs us, that he was once "a Calvinist, and that of the straitest sect." Afterwards, he adds, he "became an high Arian, next a low Arian, and then a Socinian, and in a little time a Socinian of the lowest kind, in which Christ is considered as a mere man, the son of Joseph and Mary, and naturally as fallible and peccable as Moses or any other Prophet." And after all, he tells us (Def. of Unit. for 1787. p. 111.) that he "does not know, when his creed will be fixed." Mr. Belsham having set out and ended at the same point with Dr. Priestley; it is not improbable that he has gone through the same revolution: and that he, and others who have enjoyed the same progressive illumination, would equally with Doctor Priestley still contend for the freedom of an unsettled creed, is not perhaps too violent a presumption. Now, as every step, in such an indefinite progress, must induce a corresponding change of canon, it is not wonderful that they whose creed is in a perpetual state of variation, and whose Bible must be, like their almanack, suited only to a particular season, should not have attempted any fixed standard * of the Sacred Word.

NO. XV.—ON THE HEATHEN NOTIONS OF MERIT ENTERTAINED BY UNITARIAN WRITERS.

PAGE 18. (p)—A writer, whom I cannot name but with respect,—to the beauties of whose composition, no one that possesses taste or feeling, can be insensible,—speaking of Dr. Price, in her

* Since the date of the above observation in the last edition of this work, a Testament has been published by the Unitarians, under the title of An Improved Version of the New Testament. Of this Improved Version, some notice has been already taken in the preceding pages, and more shall be said hereafter.

captivating defence of public worship against Mr. Wakefield, (to which publication I have already referred the reader in a preceding number,) uses this extraordinary language: "When a man like Dr. Price is about to resign his soul into the hands of his maker, he ought to do it not only with a reliance on his mercy, but his justice." (Mrs. Barbauld's Remarks on Mr. Wakefield's Enquiry, p. 72.) In the same stile, do Unitarian writers, in general, express themselves on this subject, representing good works as giving a claim of right to the divine acceptance.

Indeed the manner, in which some Socinians of the new school, speak of their virtues, their merits, and their title to the rewards of a happy immortality, is such as might lead us to suppose ourselves carried back to the days of the old heathen schools of the Stoics, and receiving lessons not from the followers of the humble Jesus, but from the disciples of the arrogant, and magniloquent, Chrysippus, Seneca, or Epictetus. When Chrysippus tells us, that "as it is proper for Jupiter to glory in himself, and in his own life, and to think and speak magnificently of himself, as living in a manner that deserves to be highly spoken of; so these things are becoming all good men, as being in nothing exceeded by Jupiter:" (Plut. De Stoic. Repugn. Oper. tom. ii. p. 1038. ed. Xyl.): when Seneca pronounces, that “ a good man differs only in time from God” (De Provid. cap. 1.); that “ there is one thing, in which the wise man excels God, that God is wise by the benefit of nature, not by his own choice” (Epist. 53.); and that “ it is shameful to importune the Gods in prayer, since a man’s happiness is entirely in his own power,” (Epist. 31.): and when Epictetus, (Disc. lib. iv. cap. 10.) represents the dying man making his address to God, in a strain of self-confidence, without the least acknowledgment of any one failure or neglect of duty; so that, as Miss Carter with a becoming piety remarks; it is such an address, “ as cannot without shocking arrogance, be uttered by any one born to die;” —when, I say, we hear such language from the ancient Stoic, what do we hear, but the sentiments of the philosophising Christian of the present day? and on casting an eye into the works of Priestley, Lindsey, Evanson, Wakefield, Belsham, and the other Unitarian writers, do we not instantly recognize that proud, and independent, and I had almost said heaven-defying, self-reliance, which had once distinguished the haughty disciple of the Stoa?

NO. XVI.—ON DR. JOHN TAYLOR'S SCHEME OF ATONEMENT.

PAGE 20. (9)—The scheme of Atonement, as it is here laid down, is that which has been maintained in the letters of Ben Mordecai, by the learned and ingenious, but prejudiced and erroneous, H. Taylor. It is substantially the same, that has been adopted by other theologians, who admitting a mediatorial scheme in the proper sense of the word, have thought right to found it upon the notion of a pure benevolence, in opposition to that of a retributive justice, in the Deity. But I have selected the statement of it, given by this writer, as being the best digested and most artfully fortified. It seems to avoid that part of the scheme of Dr. Taylor of Norwich, which favours the Socinian principles: but as will appear on examination, it cannot be entirely extricated from them, being originally built on an unsound foundation.

With respect to the system of Dr. Taylor of Norwich, as laid down in his Key to the Apostolic writings, and his Scripture doctrine of Atonement, it is obvious to remark, that it is nothing more, than an artificial accommodation of Scripture phrases, to notions utterly repugnant to Scripture doctrine. A short view of his scheme will satisfy us on this head. By a Sa- crifice, he says (Script. doct. ch. 2. No. 24, 25.) is meant "a symbolical address to God, intended to express before him the devotions, affections, &c. by significant, emblematical actions:" and consequently, he adds, "whatever is expressive of a pious and virtuous disposition, may be rightly included in the notion of a Sacrifice; as prayers, thanksgivings, labours," &c. &c.

Having thus widened up the notion of Sacrifice, it becomes necessary that sacrificial atonement should be made of equally extensive signification: and accordingly, because the word כִּפָּר, which we commonly translate as making atonement, is, as he says, found to be applied in the Old Testament, in its general sense, to all means used for procuring any benefit, spiritual or temporal, at God's hands, whether for ourselves or others, such as obedience, a just life, sacrifices, prayers, intercessions, self-denials, &c. &c. he therefore thinks himself justified in extending to all these, that particular species of atonement, which is effected by sacrifice: and thereby is enabled to pronounce the Sacrifice of Christ to be a ground of atonement, without taking in a single idea, that truly and properly belongs to sacrifice, or sacrificial atonement. And so, he triumphantly concludes, (Script. doct. &c. No. 152.) that he has made out the Sacrifice of Christ to be "truly and properly, in the highest manner and far beyond any other, piacular and expiatory, to make an atonement for sins, or take them away; not only to give us an example, not only to assure us of remission, or to procure our Lord a commission to publish the forgiveness of sin: but moreover, to obtain that forgiveness, by doing what God in his wisdom and goodness judged fit and expedient to be done, in order to the forgiveness of sin."

But in what, according to this explication, consists the efficacy of Christ's Sacrifice, and how has it made atonement for Sin?—He informs us himself (Key, &c. No. 148.): "Obedience, or doing the will of God, was the sacrifice of sweet smelling savour, which made atonement for the sins of the world; in this sense, that God, on account of his (Christ's) goodness and perfect obedience, thought fit to grant unto mankind, the forgiveness of those sins that were past; and farther, erected a glorious and perfect dispensation of grace, exceeding any which had gone before, in means, promises and prospects, at the head of which he set his Son our Lord Jesus Christ," &c. &c.—Thus then, the obedience of Christ was the sacrifice: and the benefits procured to us by that obedience, constitute the atonement effected by it. And the nature of these benefits, and the way in which they are wrought out for us by Christ's obedience, as we find them explained by this writer, will help us to a just view of the true nature of that, which he calls our atonement.

“Truth required, says he, (Key, &c. No. 149.) that grace be dispensed, in a manner the most proper and probable to produce reformation and holiness. Now this is what our Lord has done. He has bought us by his blood, and procured the remission of sins, as what he did and suffered was a proper reason for granting it, and a fit way of conveying and rendering effectual the grace of God,” &c.—“Now, he says, this could be done no otherwise, than by means of a moral kind, such as are apt to influence our minds, and engage us to forsake what is evil, and to work that which is good,” &c.—“and what means of this sort could be more effectual, than the heavenly and most illustrious example of the Son of God, shewing us the most perfect obedience to God, and the most generous goodness and love to men, recommended to our imitation, by all possible endearments and engaging considerations?”—And again he says, (Script. Doct. No. 170.) “By the blood of Christ, God discharges us from the guilt, because the blood of Christ is the most powerful mean of freeing us from the pollution and power of Sin,”—and he adds, “it is the ground of redemption, as it is a mean of sanctification.”—What then means the blood of Christ?—“not a mere corporeal substance; in which case, as he says, it would be of no more value in the sight of God, than any other thing of the same kind: nor is it to be considered, merely in relation to our Lord's death and sufferings, as if mere death or suffering could be of itself pleasing and acceptable to God:" no, the writer informs us, (Key, &c. No. 146.) that the "blood of Christ is his perfect obedience and goodness; and that it implies a character," which we are to transcribe into our lives and conduct. And accordingly he maintains, (Script. Doctr. No. 185.) that "our Lord's sacrifice and death is so plainly represented, as a powerful mean of improving our virtue, that we have no sufficient ground, to consider its virtue and efficacy in any other light."

To what then, according to this writer, does the entire scheme of the Atonement amount?—God being desirous to rescue man from the consequences and dominion of his Sins, and yet desirous to effect this in such a way, as might best conduce to the advancement of virtue, thought fit to make forgiveness of all sins that were past, a reward of the meritorious obedience of Christ: and by exhibiting that obedience, as a model for universal imitation, to engage mankind to follow his example, that being thereby improved in their virtue, they might be rescued from the dominion of sin: and thus making the example of Christ a "mean of sanctification," Redemption from Sin might thereby be effected.

—This, as far as I have been able to collect it, is a faithful transcript of the author's doctrine. And what there is in all this, of the nature of Sacrifice or Atonement, (at least so far as it affects those who have lived since the time of Christ,) or in what material respect, it differs from the Socinian notion, which represents Christ merely as our instructor and example, I profess myself unable to discover.

I have been thus full in my account of this writer's scheme, because by some strange oversight, and possibly from his artful accommodation of scripture phrases to his own notions, whereby he is enabled to express himself in the language of Scripture, his works have received considerable circulation, even among those whose opinions on this subject are of an opposite description. Nay, the erroneous tenets of this author, have been conveyed in a collection of Theological Tracts, some time since published by an able and learned Prelate, in the sister country: and the candidates for orders in this, are by authority enjoined, to receive part of their theological instruction from his writings. — Those who wish to see the errors of this scheme more amply reviewed and refuted, I refer to the examination of the doctrine, in the Scripture Account of Sacrifices, by Mr. Portal, and in the Criticisms on modern Notions of Atonement by Dr. Richie: in the latter of which particularly, the fallacy of the author's principles, and the gross ambiguity of his terms, are exposed with no less truth than ingenuity.

With respect to H. Taylor, who in his B. Mord. partly coincides with this writer in his explication of atonement, it is but justice to say, that he gives a view of the subject, in the main materially different: inasmuch as he represents Christ's concern for mankind, and his earnest intercession recommended by his meritorious obedience, to be the appointed means of his obtaining from God that kingdom, which empowers him to dispense forgiveness, &c.—Whereas Dr. J. Taylor makes the obedience of Christ (with regard to such as have lived since his time) the means of redemption, as being the means of man's improvement in virtue: and so far from attributing any efficacy to Christ's obedience, as operating through intercession, (to which, we find from Scripture, God has frequently bestowed his blessings, see Number IX. pp. 140, 141.) he considers the intercessions and prayers of good men for others, in no other light, than as acts of obedience, goodness and virtue. So that, in fact, the whole of his scheme, when rightly considered, (excepting only with respect to those who lived before Christ, in which part he seems inconsistent with himself, and on his own principles not easy to be understood) falls in with the notion of good works and moral obedience, as laid down by the Socinian. And here lies the secret of Mr. Belsham's remark, (Review, &c. p. 18.) that "Dr. Taylor has, in general, well explained these Jewish phrases" (viz. propitiation, sacrifice, redemption through Christ's blood, &c.) "in his admirable Key."—As Mr. Belsham rejects the notion of redemption by Christ, and of faith in Christ, in toto, (see Review, &c. pp. 18. 104. 145.) it is not difficult to assign the cause of this commendation.

NO. XVII.—THE DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT FALSELY CHARGED WITH THE PRESUMPTION OF PRONOUNCING ON THE NECESSITY OF CHRIST'S DEATH.

PAGE 21. (r) That men could not have been forgiven, unless Christ had suffered to purchase their forgiveness, is no part of the doctrine of Atonement, as held by the Church of England. What God could or could not have done, it presumes not to pronounce. What God declares he has done, that merely it asserts: and on his express word alone is it founded. But it is to be remembered, that on this, as on many other occasions, that a priori reasoning, which so frequently misleads those who object to the doctrines of our Church, is imputed by them to us. Not being themselves in the habit of bowing with humble reverence to the sacred word, they consider not that we speak merely its suggestions: * and that if we do at any time philosophize, it is but to follow, not to lead the mean-

* The language of Witsius upon this subject is worth attending to. “Supposito extare Revelationem de mysteriis, at inquiri in sensum verborum quibus ista Revelatio mihi exponitur: non est in ista inquisitione ita procedendum, ut primo rationem meam consulam, quid ea, in idearum ac notionum suarum scriniis, rei de qua agitur simile aut aduersum habeat, ut secundum eas quas ibi inuenio notiones verba revelationis exponam, id unice operam dans, ut sensum tandem aliquem quantâ maximâ possum commoditate iis dem; qui istis meis prænotionibus optime conveniat. Sed attendendum est ad ipsa verba, quid in omnibus suis circumstantiis significare apta nata sint, quidque secundum Scripturæ stilum significare soleant: atque hâc viâ reperto sensu quem verba sine torsione per se fundunt, secure in eo acquiescendum est, omniaque rationis scita subjicienda sunt isti sensui quem iis me verbis docet Deus.” To these observations he subjoins an example of the opposite modes of investigating the sense of Scripture by the philosophizing and the humble enquirer, applying the former epithet to Socinus, and taking for the particular subject of investigation the passage in Joh. i. 14. ο λογος σαξξ εγενετο.—“Socinus ita procedit: nihil inuenit in toto rationis suæ penu, quod ipsi repræsentet, Deum ita humanæ unitum naturæ, ut ea unam cum ipso constituat personam; ideoque talem conceptum absurdum Deoque iøjuriosum esse sciscit. Id supponit ad horum verborum explicationem se accingens: idcirco omnes ingenii sui nervos intendit, ut sensum aliquem iis applicet, qui ab isthâc assertionem remotissimus sit. Sollicitat verba singula, sollicitat nexum eorum, flectit, torquet, omnia agit, ne id dicere videantur quod dicunt. Nos longe aliter procedendum existimamus. Accedimus ad hanc peri-

ing of Scripture. To enter into the councils of the Almighty, and to decide what infinite wisdom must have determined, under a constitution of things different from the present, were a speculation not less absurd, than it is impious. Of this, even the few writers, whose language has, by a rigorous interpretation, been forced into a ground for the above charge against the doctrine of atonement, are perfectly innocent: for it never occurred to them, to suppose a constitution of copam simplici atque humili mente audituri atque accepturi quidquid Deo nos placeat docere. Consideramus verba in nativo suo significatu, et prout passim in sacris literis usurpantur; expendimus quid λογος notet secundum phrasin Johannis, quid γινεσθαι, quid σαξ: consideramus quomodo alibi de hâc re sacræ literæ loquantur. Ex his omnibus formamus sensum, quem recipimus humili fidei obsequio firmiterque apud animum nostrum statuimus, Filium Dei humanam naturam tam arcte sibi junxisse, ut idem et Deus et homo sit: et quamvis nostra ratio nihil unquam huic rei simile invenerit, tamen eam verissimam esse, quia verba Dei hoc docent. Qui ita, ut Socinus, instituunt, eos ex suo penu multa in verbum Dei inferre necesse est: quâ re ei insignis fit injuria. Qui uti, nos illi cogitationes suas ex verbo Dei hauriunt, quibus rationis suæ penum locupletent, quod Deo gloriosum est.”—Misc. Sacr. tom. ii. pp. 591, 592.—If the spirit which governed Socinus in his critical investigation of the sacred text, has been fairly described by Witsius in the passage which has just been cited, it must be unnecessary to add, that his followers of the present day have in no respect departed from the example of their Master.

things different from that, which divine wisdom has appointed.

When therefore, Grotius, Stillingfleet, and Clarke are charged (as they are in H. Taylor's B. Mord. Let. 5.) with contending for "the necessity of a vindication of God's honour, either by the suffering of the offenders, or by that of Christ in their room," they are by no means to be considered as contending, that it was impossible for God to have established such a dispensation, as might enable him to forgive the Sinner without some satisfaction to his justice, which is the sense forcibly put upon their words: but that, according to the method and dispensation which God's wisdom has chosen, there results a moral necessity of such vindication, founded in the wisdom and prudence of a Being, who has announced himself to mankind, as an upright Governor, resolved to maintain the observance of his laws.

That by the necessity spoken of, is meant but a moral necessity, or in other words a fitness and propriety, Dr. Clarke himself informs us: for he tells us, (Sermon 137. vol. ii. p. 142. fol. ed.) that "when the honour of God's laws had been diminished by sin, it was reasonable and necessary, in respect of God's wisdom in governing the world, that there should be a vindication," &c. And again, (Sermon 138. vol. ii. p. 150.) in answer to the question, "could not God, if he had pleased, absolutely, and of his supreme authority, without any sufferings at all, have pardoned the sins of those, whose repentance he thought fit to accept?" he says, "it becomes not us, to presume to say he had not power so to do:" but that there seems to be a fitness, in his testifying his indignation against sin: and that "the death of Christ was necessary, to make the pardon of sin reconcileable, not perhaps absolutely with strict justice (for we cannot presume to say that God might not, consistently with mere justice, have remitted as much of his own right as he pleased)—but it was necessary, at least in this respect, to make the pardon of sin, consistent with the wisdom of God, in his good government of the world; and to be a proper attestation of his irreconcilable hatred against all unrighteousness."

That the word necessary is imprudently used by Dr. Clarke and others, I readily admit; as it is liable to be misunderstood, and furnishes matter of cavil to those, who would misrepresent the whole of the doctrine. But it is evident from the passages I have cited, that so far from considering the sacrifice of Christ, as a debt paid to, because rigorously exacted by, the divine justice, it is represented by Dr. Clarke, and generally understood, merely as a fit expedient, demanded by the wisdom of God, whereby mercy might be safely administered to sinful man. Now it is curious to remark, that H. Taylor, who so warmly objects to this notion of a necessity of vindicating God's honour, as maintained by Clarke, &c. when he comes to reply to the Deist, in defence of the scheme of Christ's mediation, uses a mode of reasoning, that seems exactly similar. "God, he says (B. Mordec. Let. 5.) was not made placable by intercession; but was ready and willing to forgive, before, as well as after: and only waited to do it in such a manner, as might best shew his regard to righteousness."—Is not this in other words saying, there was a fitness, and consequently a moral necessity, that God should have forgiven sins through the intercession and meritorious obedience of Christ, for the purpose of vindicating his glory as a righteous Governor?

The profound Bishop Butler makes the following observations upon the subject of this Number.—Certain questions (he says) have been brought into the subject of redemption, and determined with rashness, and perhaps with equal rashness contrary ways. For instance, whether God could have saved the world by other means than the death of Christ, consistently with the general laws of his government. And, had not Christ come into the world, what would have been the future condition of the better sort of men; those just persons over the face of the earth, for whom, Manasses in his prayer asserts, repentance was not appointed.—The meaning of the first of these questions is greatly ambiguous: and neither of them can properly be answered, without going upon that infinitely absurd supposition, that we know the whole of the case. And perhaps the very enquiry, what would have followed if God had not done as he has, may have in it some very great impropriety, and ought not to be carried on any farther, than is necessary to help our partial and inadequate conceptions of things. (Butler's Analogy, p. 240.)—Such were the reflexions of that great divine and genuine philosopher, who at the same time maintained the doctrine of Atonement in its legitimate strictness. Will it then still be said, that divines of the Church of England uphold, as a part of that doctrine, the position, that men could not have been saved, had not Christ died to purchase their forgiveness?

NO. XVIII.—ON THE MODE OF REASONING WHEREBY THE SUFFICIENCY OF GOOD WORKS WITHOUT MEDIATION IS ATTEMPTED TO BE DEFENDED FROM SCRIPTURE.

PAGE 24. (s)—Dr. Priestley enumerates a great variety of texts to this purpose, in his 3rd. paper of the signature of Clemens. (Theol. Repos. vol. i.) Dr. Sykes, in the 2d. ch. of his Scripture Doctrine of Redemption, and H. Taylor, in his 5th and 6th Letters, (B. Mord.) have done the same. Dr. Priestley adds to these texts, the instances of Job, David, Hezekiah, Nehemiah, and Daniel, to shew that on good works alone, dependance was to be placed for acceptance: and that the pardon of sin is every where in Scripture represented, as dispensed solely on account of man's personal virtue, without the least regard to the sufferings or merit of any being whatever.

A great display is constantly made of texts of this nature, by all who oppose the received doctrine of atonement. But it is to be remarked, that as they all amount merely to this, that repentance and a good life are acceptable to God; the inference derived from them can only have weight against that doctrine, when its supporters shall disclaim repentance and a good life, as necessary concomitants of that faith in Christ's merits, whereby they hope to be saved: or when it shall be made to appear from Scripture, that these are of themselves sufficient. But do those writers, who dwell so much on good works, in opposition to the doctrine of atonement, seriously mean to insinuate, that the advocates of this doctrine, endeavour to stretch the beneficial influence of Christ's death, to the impenitent and disobedient? — Or can it be necessary to remind them, that obedience and submission to the divine will, are the main ingredients of that very spirit, which we hold to be indispensable to the producing and perfecting of a Christian faith? And again, do they wish to infer, that because these qualities are acceptable to God, they are so in themselves, and independent of all other considerations? Is it forgotten, that whilst some parts of Scripture speak of these, as well pleasing to God; others, and not less numerous, might be adduced to shew, that beside these something more is required? Dr. Priestley indeed fairly asserts, that nothing more is required, and that the language of Scripture every where represents repentance and good works, as sufficient of themselves to recommend us to the divine favour. (Hist. of Cor. vol. i. p. 155.) How then does he get over those declarations of Scripture?—He shall speak for himself.

It certainly must be admitted, he says, (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 252.) “ that some texts do seem to represent the pardon of sin, as dispensed in consideration of something else than our repentance, or personal virtue ;—and according to their literal sense, the pardon of sin is in some way or other procured by Christ.” But he adds, that “ since the pardon of sin is sometimes represented, as dispensed in consideration of the sufferings, sometimes of the merit, sometimes of the resurrection, and even of the life and obedience of Christ : when it is sometimes Christ, and sometimes the Spirit, that intercedes for us : when the dispensing of pardon is sometimes said, to be the proper act of God the Father ; and again, when it is Christ that forgives us : we can hardly hesitate in concluding, that these must be severally, partial representations, in the nature of figures and allusions, which at proper distances are allowed to be inconsistent :—and from so vague a representation of a matter of fact, founded on texts, which carry with them so much the air of figure, allusion and accommodation, reason and common sense, he says, compel us to appeal to the plain general tenor of Scripture," which he pronounces to be in favour of the sufficiency of good works.—And thus a great part of Scripture is swept away at one stroke, under the name of figure, allusion, &c. &c. And because Christ is pointed out to us, as the means of our salvation, in every light in which he is viewed, (for as to the Father and the Holy Spirit being spoken of, as also concerned in the work of our Redemption, this creates no difficulty) reason and common sense compel us to pronounce him, as not connected with our salvation in any.

This furnishes an additional specimen of the way in which Scripture is treated, by our modern rational Commentators. A number of texts, enforcing a spirit of humble submission to God's will, which is by no means inconsistent with, but on the contrary includes in its nature, a spirit of Christian faith, are taken literally, as not implying this faith, because it is not expressly named. And then another set of passages, in which this faith is expressly named, and literally required, are set aside as figurative. And it is pronounced upon the whole, that common sense is to decide the matter.—And thus, by rejecting one set of passages entirely as figurative; and then by explaining another set literally and independently, with which the former were connected, and would have perfectly coalesced, so as to afford a satisfactory and consistent meaning; the point is clearly made out. Relying upon this method, which Dr. Priestley has discovered, of retaining whatever establishes his opinion, and rejecting whatever makes against it, Mr. Belsham may indeed safely challenge the whole body of the orthodox, to produce a single text, that shall stand in opposition to his and Dr. Priestley's dogmas.

But moreover it has been well remarked, that all such declarations in Scripture, as promise pardon to repentance, and are thence inferred to pronounce repentance of itself sufficient, as they were subsequent to the promise of a Redeemer, must be altogether inconclusive, even viewed in a distinct and independent light, inasmuch as it may have been in virtue of the pre-ordained atonement, that this repentance was accepted. And as to the force of the word freely, on which not only Dr. Priestley relies very much, but also Dr. Sykes in his Scrip. Doctr. of Redemp. and H. Taylor in the beginning of his Sixth Letter, (B. Mord. Apol.) it is obvious, that nothing more is meant by passages that employ this expression in describing God's forgiveness of Sinners, than that this forgiveness was free with respect to any merits on the part of man, or any claim which from repentance, or any other cause, he might be supposed to possess: since admitting such claim it would be not free, but earned. And in this very sense it is, that Dr. J. Taylor himself, in his Key, &c. (No. 67.) contends, that the word free is to be understood: “the blessing of redemption being, as he says, with regard to us, of free grace—that is, not owing to any obedience of ours.”—Any other application of the term, must make the word free synonymous with unconditional; in which case, forgiveness could not be a free gift, if repentance were required to obtain it; that is, unless it were extended indiscriminately to the impenitent as well as the penitent. So that, in fact, the very use of the word free, as applied to God’s forgiveness of men, is so far from supporting the opinion of the sufficiency of repentance in itself, that it goes to establish the direct contrary: clearly evincing, that repentance can give no claim to forgiveness.—See some excellent reasoning on this subject, in the judicious discourses, delivered at the Bampton Lecture, by Mr. Veysie, Sermon 6, and 7.

NO. XIX.—THE WANT OF A DISCOVERABLE CONNECTION BETWEEN THE MEANS AND THE END, EQUALLY APPLIES TO EVERY SCHEME OF ATONEMENT.

PAGE 24. (t)—Dr. J. Taylor illustrates this matter by a familiar parallel. (Key, &c. No. 151.)

—To the question “wherein is Christ’s love and obedience, a just foundation of the divine grace?” he answers, that he knows not how to explain himself better than by the following instance.—There have been masters willing, now and then, to grant a relaxation of study, or even to remit deserved punishment, in case any one boy, in behalf of the whole school, or of the offender, would compose a copy of Latin verses. This at once shewed the master’s love and lenity, was a proper expedient for promoting learning and benevolence to the society of little men, training up for future usefulness, &c.—and one may say, that the kind verse-maker purchased the favour in both cases, or that his learning, industry, goodness, and compliance with the governor’s will and pleasure, was a just ground and foundation of the pardon and refreshment, or a proper reason of granting them.

This Dr. T. declares to be the best explanation he can give, of his scheme of man’s redemption by Christ. And that in this there is any natural connexion between the exertions of the individual, and the indulgence granted to the rest of this little society, it is not even pretended. The whole contrivance is admitted as a good expedient or means, whereby the intended kindness of the master was to be shewn. If, in order to supply a link, whereby they may be drawn into connexion, the indulgence granted be supposed as a reward to the exertions and obedience of the individual, as is done by H. Taylor, in his Ben. Mord. Apology: then, unless this reward, in the case of Christ, be but ostensibly such, and intended solely as a public exhibition to mankind, of the favour with which obedience and good conduct will be viewed by the Deity, (in which case it is not a real reward, but merely a prudent expedient as before,) it must of necessity be admitted, that the trial of Christ's obedience was a principal object in the scheme of his incarnation, for without some trial of his obedience how could it merit a reward? Now in what just sense of the word, there could have been any trial of Christ's obedience, it is for those to consider, who do not mean to degrade the Son of God to the Socinian standard.

The author of the Scripture Account of Sacrifices, has devised a scheme, the chief object of which is to remedy the want of connexion. In this, the sacrifice of Christ is not considered, as a wise expedient of an instituted nature merely, but as a natural inducement, whereby God's displeasure against mankind was literally averted, by Christ's intercession and mediation recommended by his great zeal and interest in the salvation of men, manifested in the offering up his life in the cause. The author of this scheme has, with great ingenuity, accommodated to his notion, the nature of the Patriarchal, and Jewish Sacrifices; making their efficacy to consist entirely in the force of supplication or intercession, and their nature to be that of a gift, strongly expressive of homage and devotion. This author, however, although his work contains most excellent and instructive matter, is not perfectly consistent: since, to have appointed a scheme of intercession, whereby, agreeably to rectitude, God might be induced to grant forgiveness, (and that God did appoint this scheme, the author is obliged to confess,) is in other words to have planned the redemption of man through the medium of intercession, but not in consequence of it:—in which case, this theory falls in with the notion of instituted means adopted by the rest.

But surely, upon the whole, it is not wonderful, that the grand and mysterious scheme of our Redemption should present to the ambitious curiosity of human intellect, the same impediment, which restrains its inquisitive researches in every part of nature:—the modus operandi, the connecting link of cause and effect, being itself a mystery impenetrable to human sagacity, equally in things the most familiar and the most obscure. On this subject, it were well, that the old distinction, laid down by Mr. Locke, were remembered by those, who would deem it an insult to have it supposed, that they were not perfectly acquainted with the writings of that eminent philosopher.

NO. XX.—ON THE SCRIPTURE PHRASE OF OUR BEING RECONCILED TO GOD.

PAGE 25. (v)—See Theol. Repos. vol. 1. pp. 177, 178. in which several texts are adduced, to establish this proposition. It is likewise attempted to maintain it on the general ground of the divine immutability: in virtue of which, it is asserted, the sufferings of Christ can produce no change in God: and that in man, consequently, the change is to be brought about. God is therefore not to be reconciled to men, but men to God. H. Taylor also (Ben. Mord. Apol. p. 692—694) contends, that “God is never said to be reconciled to the world, because he was never at enmity with it. It was the world that was at enmity with God, and was to be reconciled by coming to the knowledge of his goodness to them.” He adduces texts, similar to those above referred to, in confirmation of his opinion: and upon the whole peremptorily asserts, that “the New Testament knows no such language, as that God was reconciled to the world.” The same ground had been before taken by Sykes, in his Scrip. Doctr. of Redemp. (pp. 56. 426.) and in his Comm. on Hebr.—“There could be no need,” he says, (on Hebr. vii. 27.) “of reconciling God to man, when he had already shewn his love to man so far, as to send his Son to reconcile man to God.”

The argument adopted by these writers had been long before urged by Crellius, in support of the system of Socinus. And it deserves to be remarked, that all these writers have built their arguments, upon an erroneous acceptance of the original word, which implies reconciliation. Hammond, and after him, Le Clerc (on Matt. v. 24) remark, that the words καταλλατῆσθαι and διαλλατῆσθαι have a peculiar sense in the New Testament: that, whereas in ordinary Greek Authors they signify to be pacified, and so reconciled, here on the other hand, in the force of the reciprocal Hithpael among the Hebrews, is implied to reconcile one's self to another, that is to appease, or obtain the favour of, that other: and in support of this interpretation, they adduce instances from Rom. v. 10. 1 Cor. vii. 11. 2 Cor. v. 20, and especially Mat. v. 24, in which last διαλλαγηθι τω αδελφω must necessarily signify, take care that thy Brother be reconciled to thee, since that which goes before, is not, that he hath done thee injury, but thou him: and this they derive from the force of the Hebrew word פָּצַח transferred to the Greek verb, in the use of it by Jewish writers. In this sense of the words καταλλαττεσθαι and διαλλαττεσθαι, as applied in the New *Testament, all the Commentators concur. See Rosenmuller and Wall on 2 Cor. v. 20. and Whitby on the words, wherever they occur. Schleusner, in his excellent Lexicon, confirms by several instances, the explication of the terms here contended for: and

* The application of the word διαλλαττεσθαι is precisely the same, as is made by the Seventy, in their translation of 1 Sam. xxix. 4. where they speak of David's appeasing the Palaiet, in his Observ. Philolog. in Nov. Test. Mat. v. 24. maintains, that this use of the terms is not confined to the Jewish writers, transferring the force of the verb רצח to the Greek expression, but is frequent among writers purely Greek: he instances Theano in Opusc. Mytholog. and Appian. Alexandr. de Bell. Civil. and explains it as an elliptical form, the words $\epsilon\iota\varsigma \chi\omicron\rho\omicron\iota\upsilon$ being understood.

It is evident then, that the writers, who have founded their objection against the propitiation of the divinity, on the use of the word reconciled in the New Testament, have attended rather to the force of the term, as applied in the language of the translation, than in that of the original. But, even without looking beyond the translation, it seems surprising, that the context did not correct their error, clearly determining the sense, not only in Mat. v. 24. where it is perfectly obvious and unequivocal, as is shewn in page 26; but also in 2 Cor. v. 19, in which anger of Saul. $\text{Εν τίνι ΔΙΑΛΛΑΓΗΣΕΤΑΙ τω Κυρίω αυτου;}$

Wherewith shall he RECONCILE HIMSELF to his master?
 according to our common version. Not surely, how shall he remove his own anger against his master; but, how shall he remove his master's anger against him; how shall he restore himself to his master's favour? If any additional instance had been wanting, to establish the use of the word in this sense among the Jewish writers, this one must prove decisive.

the manner of reconciling the world to God is expressly described, viz. his not imputing their trespasses unto them, that is, his granting them forgiveness. There are upon the whole but five places in the New Testament, in which the term is used with respect to God; Rom. v. 10, and xi. 15. 2 Cor. v. 18, 19, 20. Ephes. ii. 16, and Col. i. 20, 21. Whoever will take the trouble of consulting Hammond and Whitby on these passages, will be satisfied, that the application is diametrically opposite to that, for which the Socinian writers contend. There are but two places besides, in which the term occurs, Mat. v. 24. and 1 Cor. vii. 11. in both of which the application is clear. And it deserves to be particularly noticed, that Dr. Sykes (Scrip. Doctr. of Redemp. p. 57.) sinks the former passage altogether, and notices the latter alone, asserting that this is the only one, in which the word is used, not in relation to the reconciliation of the world to God: and this, after having inadvertently stated in the preceding page, that there were two such passages. This will appear the less unaccountable, when it is considered, that the expression as applied in Matthew, could be got rid of by no refinement whatever: but that the application in 1 Corinthians, (not indeed in our translation which is not sufficiently explicit, but examined in the original,) will appear as little friendly to his exposition, Hammond and Le Clerc have abundantly evinced by their interpretation of the passage.

NO. XXI.—ON THE TRUE DISTINCTION BETWEEN THE LAYING ASIDE OUR ENMITY TO GOD, AND BEING RECONCILED TO GOD.

PAGE 27. (w)—It is well remarked in the Theological Repository, by a writer under the signature Verus, * that the laying aside our enmity to God must be a necessary qualification for, though without constituting the formal nature of, our reconciliation to God. This judicious distinction places the matter in a fair light. That God will not receive us into favour so long as we are at enmity with him, is most certain; but that thence it should be inferred, that on laying aside our enmity, we are necessarily restored to his favour, is surely an odd instance of logical deduction.

* This writer I find to have been the Rev. Mr. Brekell: a writer certainly deserving of praise, both for the ability with which he combated the sophistry of the heterodox, and for the boldness with which he carried the war into the very camp of the enemy.

NO. XXII.—ON THE PROOFS FROM SCRIPTURE, THAT THE SINNER IS THE OBJECT OF THE DI-VINE DISPLEASURE.

PAGE 27. (x)—Heb. x. 26, 27, For if we sin wilfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more SACRIFICE FOR SINS, but a certain FEARFUL LOOKING FOR OF JUDGMENT AND FIERY INDIGNATION, which shall devour the adversaries: and again, For we know him that hath said, vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompence, saith the Lord: and again, It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the Living God: and again, (Rom. v. 9, 10.) Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him—for if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God through his Son, &c. In this last passage, it is not only clearly expressed, that we are from disobedience exposed to the divine displeasure, but also that the way, whereby we are rescued from the effects of that displeasure, or, as is here held an equivalent form of expression, reconciled to God, is by the death of Christ.

To quote all the passages that speak a similar language, were a tedious task. Nor indeed was the voice of Revelation wanted to inform men, that the Sinner is the object of God's displeasure. Reason has at all times loudly proclaimed this truth: and in that predominating terror, that Δεισιδαιμονια, which, as shewn in Number V. has in every age and clime, disfigured or rather absorbed the religion of the Gentiles, the natural sentiment of the human mind may be easily discerned.

What is the language of the celebrated Adam Smith on this subject?—"But if it be meant, that vice does not appear to the Deity to be, for its own sake, the object of abhorrence and aversion, and what, for its own sake, it is fit and right should be punished, the truth of this maxim can, by no means, be so easily admitted. If we consult our natural sentiments, we are apt to fear, lest before the holiness of God, vice should appear to be more worthy of punishment, than the weakness and imperfection of human nature can ever seem to be of reward. Man, when about to appear before a being of infinite perfection, can feel but little confidence in his own merit, or in the imperfect propriety of his own conduct. In the presence of his fellow-creatures, he may often justly elevate himself, and may often have reason to think highly of his own character and conduct, compared to the still greater imperfection of theirs. But the case is quite different when about to appear before his infinite Creator. To such a being, he can scarce imagine, that his littleness and weakness should ever seem to be the proper object, either of esteem or of reward. But he can easily conceive, how the numberless violations of duty, of which he has been guilty, should render him the object of aversion and punishment; neither can he see any reason why the divine indignation should not be let loose without any restraint, upon so vile an insect, as he is sensible that he himself must appear to be. If he would still hope for happiness, he is conscious that he cannot demand it from the justice, but that he must intreat it from the mercy of God. Repentance, sorrow, humiliation, contrition at the thought of his past conduct, are, upon this account, the sentiments which become him, and seem to be the only means which he has left for appeasing that wrath which, he knows, he has justly provoked. He even distrusts the efficacy of all these, and naturally fears, lest the wisdom of God should not, like the weakness of man, be prevailed upon to spare the crime, by the most importunate lamentations of the criminal. Some other intercession, some other sacrifice, some other atonement, he imagines, must be made for him, beyond what he himself is capable of making, before the purity of the divine justice can be reconciled to his manifest offences.

“The doctrines of revelation coincide, in every respect, with those original anticipations of na- ture; and, as they teach us how little we can depend upon the imperfection of our own virtue, so they shew us, at the same time, that the most powerful intercession has been made, and the most dreadful atonement has been paid for our manifold transgressions and iniquities." (THEORY OF MORAL SENTIMENTS, p. 204—206.)

Such were the reflexions of a man, whose powers of thinking and reasoning will surely not be pronounced inferior to those of any even of the most distinguished champions of the Unitarian school, and whose theological opinions cannot be charged with any supposed tincture from professional habits or interests. A layman, (and he too the familiar friend of David Hume,) whose life was employed in scientific, political and philosophical research, has given to the world these sentiments as the natural suggestions of reason.* Yet these are the sentiments which

* When these observations were before committed to the press, I was not aware, that the pious reflexions, to which they particularly advert, are no longer to be found, as constituting a part of that work from which they have been quoted. The fact is, that in the later editions of the Theory of Moral Sentiments, no one sentence appears of the extract which has been cited above, and which I had derived from the first edition, the only one that I possessed. This circumstance, however, does not in any degree affect the truth of what had been said by the author, nor the justness of the sentiments which he had uttered in a pure are the scoff of sciolists and witlings.—Compare these observations of Adam Smith with what has been said on the same subject in Numbers IV. IX. and XV.

NO. XXIII.—INSTANCE FROM THE BOOK OF JOB, OF SACRIFICE BEING PRESCRIBED, TO AVERT GOD'S ANGER.

PAGE 28. (y)—It was not without much surprise, that after having written the sentence here referred to, I found on reading a paper of Dr. Priestley's in the Theol. Rep. (vol. i. p. 404.) that the Book of Job was appealed to by him, as furnishing a decisive proof, not only, “that mankind in his time had not the least apprehension that repentance and reformation alone, without the sufferings or merit of any Being whatever, would not sufficiently atone for past offences:” but that “the Almighty himself gives a sanction to these sentiments.” Let the Book of and unsophisticated state of mind. It evinces indeed, that he did not altogether escape the infection of David Hume's society; and it adds one proof more to the many that already existed, of the danger, even to the most enlightened, from a familiar contact with infidelity. How far Adam Smith's partiality to Hume did ultimately carry him, may easily be collected from his emphatical observations on the character of his deceased friend, to which I shall have occasion to direct the reader's attention in another part of these volumes.

Job speak for itself:—The Lord said to Eliphaz the Temanite, my wrath is kindled against thee and thy friends: for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my Servant Job hath—Therefore take unto you now seven bullocks and seven rams, and go to my Servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my Servant Job shall pray for you: for him will I accept, lest I deal with you after your folly. (Job. xlii. 7, 8.) If this be not a sufficient specimen, we are supplied with another in ch. i. 4, 5. in which it is said, that after the sons of Job had been employed in feasting, Job sent and sanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all: for Job said, IT MAY BE THAT MY SONS HAVE SINNED, AND CURSED GOD IN THEIR HEARTS. Thus did Job continually.—I leave these without comment, to confront the assertions of Dr. Priestley and to demonstrate the value of his representations of Scripture. I shall only add, that in the very page in which he makes the above assertions, he has quoted from Job a passage, that immediately follows the former of those here cited.

NO. XXIV. — ON THE ATTRIBUTE OF THE DIVINE JUSTICE.

PAGE 28. (2)—Dr. Priestley (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 417.) asserts, that “Justice in the Deity, can be no more than a modification of that goodness or benevolence, which is his SOLE governing principle :” from which he of course infers, that “under the administration of God, there can be no occasion to exercise any severity on penitent offenders;” or in other words, that repentance must of itself, from the nature of the Deity, cancel all former offences; and that the man, who has spent a life of gross vice and audacious impiety, if he at any time reform, shall stand as clear of the divine displeasure as he, who has uniformly, to the utmost of his power, walked before his God, in a spirit of meek and pious obedience. This is certainly the necessary result of pure benevolence: nay, the same principle followed up, must exclude punishment in all cases whatever; the very notion of punishment being incompatible with pure benevolence. But surely it would be a strange property of JUSTICE, call it, with Dr. Priestley, a modification of benevolence, or whatever else he pleases, to release all from punishment, the hardened and unrelenting offender no less than the sincerely contrite, and truly humbled, penitent.

But in his use of the term justice, as applied to the Deity, is not Dr. Priestley guilty of most unworthy trifling? Why speak of it, as “a modification of the divine benevolence,” if it be nothing different from that attribute; and if it be different from it, how can benevolence be the “SOLE governing principle” of the divine administration?—The word justice then is plainly but a sound made use of to save appearances, as an attribute called by that name has usually been ascribed to the Deity; but in reality nothing is meant by it, in Dr. Priestley’s application of the term, different from pure and absolute benevolence. This is likewise evident, as we have seen, from the whole course of his argument. Now could it be conceded to Dr. Priestley, that the whole character of God is to be resolved into simple benevolence, then the scheme, which by rejecting the notion of divine displeasure against the sinner involves impunity of guilt, might fairly be admitted. But, as it has been well remarked, “if rectitude be the measure and rule of that benevolence, it might rather be presumed, that the scheme of Redemption would carry a relation to Sinners, in one way as objects of mercy, in another as objects of punishment; that God might be just, and YET the justifier of him that believeth in the Redeemer.” See the 2d of Holmes’s Four Tracts, in which he confirms by parallel instances, the use of the word καὶ as applied in the above passage by Whitby in his Paraphrase.—On the subject of this Number at large, see also Numbers IV. XXII. and Balguy's Essay on Redemption.

NO. XXV.—ON THE TEXT IN JOHN DESCRIBING
OUR LORD, AS THE LAMB OF GOD, WHICH TAK-ETH AWAY THE SINS OF THE WORLD.

PAGE 29. (a)—What efforts are made to get rid of those parts of Scripture, that lend support to the received doctrine of the Sacrifice of Christ, is evident from the remark made on this passage, by the ingenious author of Ben Mordecai's Apology. "The allusion here," he says, "seems to be made to the 53d chapter of Isaiah, but the Lamb is not there considered as a Lamb to be sacrificed, but as a Lamb to be sheared." (Let. 7. p. 794. 2d Ed. 8vo.)—Now, upon what principle this author is enabled to pronounce, that the allusion in this place, is made to the Lamb spoken of in Isaiah, rather than to the Paschal Lamb, or to the Lamb, which under the Jewish Law was offered daily for the sins of the people, it is difficult to discover. His only reason seems to be, that in admitting the reference to either of the two last, the notion of sacrifice is necessarily involved; and the grand object in maintaining the resemblance to a Lamb that was to be sheared, not slain, was to keep the death of Christ out of view as much as possible.

But of the manner, in which Scripture is here used to support a particular hypothesis, we shall be better able to form a right judgment, when it shall have appeared, that the reference in John is not made to Isaiah; and also, that the Lamb in Isaiah is considered as a Lamb to be slain.

The latter is evident, not only from the entire context, but from the very words of the prophet, which describe the person spoken of (liii. 7.) to be “brought as a Lamb to the slaughter;” so that one cannot but wonder at the pains taken to force the application to this passage of Isaiah, and still more at the peremptory assertion that the Lamb here spoken of, was a Lamb to be sheared only. It is true indeed, there is subjoined, and as a sheep before her SHEARERS is dumb: but if Mr. Wakefield’s remarks on Acts viii. 32, in which he contends that the word translated shearer should have been rendered slayer, be a just one, the objection vanishes at once. Retaining, however, the clause as it stands in the present version, that which follows,—so he openeth not his mouth,—clearly explains, that the character intended to be conveyed by the Prophet, in the whole of this figurative representation, was that of a meek and uncomplaining resignation to suffering and death.

And this also shews us, that the passage in Isaiah, could not have been the one immediately referred to by John; because in it the Lamb is introduced but incidentally, and as furnishing the only adequate resemblance to that character, which was the primary object of the Prophet's contemplation: whereas, in the Baptist's declaration, that Jesus was THE Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, the reference must naturally be to a Lamb before described, and understood, as possessed of some similar or corresponding virtue, such as St. Peter alludes to when he says, (1 Peter i. 18, 19.) Ye were REDEEMED—with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish. In this an allusion is evidently made to a Lamb, whose blood, under the Jewish Law bore analogy to that of Christ: that is, either to the Paschal Lamb, by the sprinkling of whose blood the Israelites had been delivered from destruction; or to the Lamb, that was daily sacrificed for the sins of the people, and which was bought with that half shekel, which all the Jews yearly paid, εις λυτρον της ψυχης αυτων, εξιλασασθαι περι των ψυχων αυτων, as the price of redemption of their Lives, to make an atonement for them. (Exod. xxx. 12. 14. 16.) With a view to this last, it is, that St. Peter most probably uses the expressions,

We were not redeemed with Silver and Gold— but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb, &c. i. e. it is not by a Lamb purchased with Silver and Gold that you have been redeemed, but by Christ, that truly spotless Lamb, which the former was intended to prefigure; who, by shedding his blood, has effectually redeemed you from the consequences of your sins; or, as the Baptist had before described him, the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world; and, as St. John, who records these expressions of the Baptist, again speaks of him in the Apocalypse, (v. 9.) the Lamb which had been SLAIN, and by its Blood REDEEMED men out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, or in other words, that had taken away the sins of the world.

The author indeed admits, (what it was impossible for him to deny,) that in the Apocalypse, Christ “is spoken of as a Lamb that was slain:” but then he says, that “he is not spoken of as a vicarious sacrifice, for the Jews had no sacrifices of that nature.” (Vol. ii. p. 789.) Be it so for the present: it is clear however, that the Lamb, to which the allusion is made in the figurative representations of Christ in the New Testament, is a Lamb that was slain and sacrificed; and that nothing, but the prejudices arising from a favourite hypothesis, could have led this writer to contend against a truth so notorious, and upon grounds so frivolous.

NO. XXVI.—ON THE MEANING OF THE WORD
PROPITIATION IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

PAGE 29. (b)—The word ιασμος, translated propitiation, occurs in the New Testament, but in the two passages noticed in the page here referred to; viz. 1 John ii. 2. and iv. 10. Its true force, however, is obvious; since, as appears from the application of the words ιασμος, ιασκομαι, εξιλασκομαι, by the Seventy in the Old Testament, it corresponds to the Hebrew word כפר, and therefore implies, the making atonement, and thereby effecting a reconciliation with, or propitiating the Deity.—The Greek translation of Ezekiel (xliv. 29.) has made it synonymous with חטאת, a sin offering: and thus, H. Taylor (B. Mord. p. 808.) asserts, the word should be here translated.

But it is curious to remark, that this writer has been so far led away by a desire to maintain the system which he has adopted, that in two pages after, he goes on to shew, that no one circumstance belonging to the sin-offering, is to be found in the sacrifice of Christ. As producing indeed “the effect of the sin-offerings, remission of sins,” he concludes it may be so called, though possessing no one ingredient that enters into the composition of a sin-offering. His radical error on the scripture use of the word re- conciliation, (which has been already examined,) prevented him from admitting the term propitiation, or propitiatory sacrifice: sin-offering, he therefore substitutes, and then endeavours to fritter this away.—It deserves to be noticed, that even Sykes, whose attachment to the orthodox opinions will not be suspected to have much biassed his judgment on this subject, considers ἐξιλασμεσθαι to be correspondent to כפר, and explains both by the words expiate, atone, propitiate, “whatever the means were, he adds, by which this was to be done.” Essay on Sacrifices, pp. 132. 135.

In Rom. iii. 25. ἱλασηριον * is translated in the same sense with ἱλασμος, a propitiation or propitiatory offering, θυμα or ἱερειον being understood as its substantive; and although it be true, as Krebsius observes, that the Seventy always apply this term to the Mercy-Seat, or covering of the ark, yet strong arguments appear in favour of the present translation. See Schleusner

* ἱλασηριον—subaudiendum videtur ἱερειον aut θυμα, expiatorium sacrificium, quemadmodum eadem ellipsis frequentissima est apud τες ὁ in voce σωτηριον, et in χαρισηριον apud Auctores. Hesychius exponit καθαρησιον eadem ellipsi, nisi substantive sumptum idem significare malis quod ἱλασμον propitiationem, ut Vulgatus verit consentiente Beza. Ejus generis substantiva sunt δικασηριον, θυσιασηριον, φυλακτηριον, et similia; adeoque Christus eodem modo vocabitur ἱλασηριον, quo ἱλασμος 1 Joh. ii. 2. et iv. 10. Elsner. Obs. Sacr. tom. ii. pp. 20, 21.

on the word: also Josephus, as referred to by Krebsius and * Michaelis. Veysie, (Bampt. Lect. pp. 219, 220, 221,) has well enumerated its various significations.

NO. XXVII.—ON THE TEXTS DESCRIBING CHRIST'S DEATH AS A SACRIFICE FOR SIN.

PAGE 29. (c)—Isai. liii. 5—8. Mat. xx. 28. xxvi. 28. Mark x. 45. Acts viii. 32, 33. Rom. iii. 24, 25. iv. 25. v. 6—10. 1 Cor. v. 7. xv. 3. 2 Cor. v. 21. Eph. i. 7. Col. i. 14. 1 Tim. ii. 6. Heb. i. 3. ii. 17. ix. 12—28. x. 10. 14. 18. 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. 1 Joh. iv. 10. Rev. v. 9—12. xiii. 8.—All which, and several other passages, speak of the death of Christ, in the same sacrificial terms, that had been applied to the sin-offerings of old. So that they, who would reject the notion of Christ's death, as a true and real sacrifice for sin, must refine away the natural and direct meaning of all these passages: or in other words, they must new model the entire tenor of scripture language, before they can accomplish their point.

* Michaelis says (Translation by Marsh, vol. i. p. 187.) “Josephus, having previously observed that the blood of the martyrs had made atonement for their countrymen, and that they were ωσπερ αντιψυχον (vicima substituta) της τε εθνικης αμαρτιας, continues as follows, και δια τε αιματος των ευσεβων εκεινων, και τε ΙΛΑΣΤΗΡΙΟΥ τε θανατε αυτων η θεια προνοια τον Ισραηλ διεσωσε.” On the use of the word ιλαστηριον amongst Jewish writers, and the strict propitiatory sense in which it was used by the Hellenistic Jews, I deem this passage from Josephus decisive; and I have but little hesitation in denying the utmost ingenuity of Socinian exposition to do away the force of its application to the subject before us.—Michaelis in p. 179, remarks, that “in Rom. iii. 25. ιλαστηριον has been taken by some in the sense of mercy-seat, but that Kypke has properly preferred the translation, PROPITIATORY SACRIFICE.”—Michaelis was surely no superficial nor bigoted expositor of holy writ.

Dr. Priestley indeed, although he professes (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 125.) to collect "ALL the texts, in which Christ is represented as a sacrifice either expressly or by plain reference," has not been able to find so many to this purpose, as have been here referred to. After the most careful research, he could discover but a very few; and of these he remarks, that "the greater part are from one Epistle, which is allowed in other respects to abound with the strongest figures, metaphors, and allegories:" and these being rejected, "the rest he says are too few to bear the very great stress, that has been laid upon them:"—and thus they are all discarded with one sweeping remark, that they carry with them the air of figure, and that had Christ's death been considered, as the intended antitype of the sacrifices under the law, this would have been asserted in the fullest manner, and would have been more frequently referred to. We are here furnished with an instance, of the most expeditious, and effectual method, of evading the authority of Scripture.—First, overlook a considerable majority, and particularly of the strongest texts, that go to support the doctrine you oppose: in the next place assert, that of the remainder, a large proportion belongs to a particular writer, whom you think proper to charge with metaphor, allegory, &c. &c: then object to the residue, as too few on which to rest any doctrine of importance: but lest even these might give some trouble in the examination, explode them at once with the cry of figure, &c. &c.—This is the treatment, that Scripture too frequently receives, from those who choose to call themselves rational and enlightened Commentators.

There are two texts, however, on which Dr. Priestley has thought fit to bestow some critical attention, for the purpose of shewing, that they are not entitled to rank even with those few, that he has enumerated as bearing a plausible resemblance to the doctrine in question. From his reasoning on these, we shall be able to judge, what the candour and justice of his criticisms on the others would have been, had he taken the trouble to produce them. The two texts are, Isai. liii. 10. When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin: and 2 Cor. v. 21, He made him sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

Against the first, he argues from the disagreement in the versions, which he observes may lead us to suspect some corruption in our present copies of the Hebrew text. Our translation, he says, makes a change of person in the sentence — HE hath put him to grief—when THOU shalt make his soul an offering for sin, HE shall see his seed, &c. in which, he adds, it agrees with no ancient version whatever. In the next place, he asserts, that the Syriac alone retains the sense of our translation, and at the same time remarks that this version of the Old Testament is but of little authority. He then gives the reading of the clause, by the Seventy and the Arabic, If ye offer a sacrifice for sin, your Soul shall see a long-lived offspring. He concludes with the Chaldee paraphrase of Jonathian, which is different from all. And from the whole he draws this result, that the uncertainty as to the true reading of the original, must render the passage of no authority. (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 127.)

But the real state of the case is widely different from this representation: for 1. our translation does not absolutely pronounce upon the change of person, so as to preclude an agreement with the ancient versions. 2. The Syriac is not the only version that retains the sense of ours: the Vulgate, which Dr. P. has thought proper to omit, exactly corresponding in sense. 3. The Syriac version of the Old Testament, so far from being of little authority, is of the very highest. 4. The concurrence of the LXX and the Arabic is not a joint but a single testimony, inasmuch as the Arabic is known to be little more than a version of the *LXX, and consequently can lend no farther support, than as verifying the reading of the LXX, at the time when this version was made : and that it does not even authenticate the reading of the LXX at an early day, may be collected from the Prolegom. of Walton, and Kennicot's State of the Hebr. text, as referred to in the note below. 5. The Chaldee paraphrase of Jonathan is remarkable (as Bishop Lowth states in his Prelim. Dissert.) “for a wordy allegorical explanation,” so that an exactness of translation is not here to be expected. And, lastly, the apparent differences of the versions, may be explained by, and fairly reconciled to, the present reading of the Hebrew text.

These several points will be best explained, by beginning with the last. The state of the Hebrew text, as it stands in all our present bibles, at least in such of them as I have consulted, viz. Walton's Polyglot, Michaelis, Houbigant, Kennicot, Doederlein, &c. and scarcely undergoing any variation however minute, from the prodigious variety of copies examined by Kennicot and De Rossi, is as follows, אֵם תְּשִׁים אִשָּׁם נִפְשׁוֹ יִרְאֶה זֶרַע יִאֲרִיךְ יָמָיו. Now these words, as they stand, manifestly admit of a two-fold translation, according as the word תשיח is considered to be of the second person masculine, or the third person feminine,—viz. when THOU shalt make his soul an offering for sin, or when HIS SOUL shall make an offering for sin: and though, with Ludovicus de Dieu, our present translation of the Bible has followed the former in the text, yet has it with Cocceius, Montanus, Junius and Tremellius, Castellio, and almost every other learned expositor of the Bible, retained the latter, inserting it in the margin, as may be seen in any of our common Bibles. It deserves also to be remarked, that in the old editions of our English Bible, (see Matthewe's, Cranmer's or the Great Bible, and Taverner's; see also the Bibles in the time of Elizabeth, viz. the Geneva and Bishop's Bibles; see all in short that preceded James's translation,) this latter reading is the only one that is given: and it should be observed, (see Newcome's Historic. View, p. 105) that one of the rules prescribed to the translators employed in the last named version, which is the one now in use, was,—“that where a Hebrew or Greek word admitted of two proper senses, one should be expressed in the context, and the other in the margin.” Thus it appears, that Dr. Priestley must have glanced his eye, most cursorily indeed, upon our English translation, when he charges it so peremptorily with the abrupt change of person.

* See Bishop Lowth's Preliminary Dissert. to his Translation of Isaiah—and Walton's Polyglot Prolegom. 15.—also Kennicot's State of the Hebr. Text. vol. ii. pp. 453, 454.

Again, this very translation, which, beside the older expositors above referred to, has the support of Vitranga and Bishop Lowth, and is perfectly consistent with the most accurate and grammatical rendering of the passage in question, agrees sufficiently with the ancient versions. In sense there is no difference, and whatever variation there is in the expression, may be satisfactorily accounted for from a farther examination of the original. Thus in the Vulgate it is rendered, When he shall make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see, &c.—and in the Syriac, the penalty of sin is laid upon his soul, (i. e. in other words, his soul is made an offering for sin) that he might see, &c. Now the first is a literal translation of the Hebrew, if only instead of תשים be read ישים,* which we may readily suppose some copies of the Hebrew to have done, without introducing the smallest uncertainty into the text. The second will also be found a literal version, if for תשים be read תשם, which may be taken passively, shall be made. Now it appears from Kennicot's various readings, that one MS. supports this reading. But there is a remark on this head made by Houbigant, (and which has been overlooked both by Bishop Lowth, and the commentator on

* Doederlein translates as if the word were ישים, ubi vitam suam, ut piaculum, interposuerit; and adds, that the book Sohar (Parascha ישב) particularly warns us that it is so to be read, not תשים.

Isaiah who has succeeded him, *) that seems to deserve considerable notice. The word, he says, should be תשם, in the passive voice: for that, as Morinus observes, the Jews, before the vowel points were introduced, were used to mark the passive by the letter ם interposed; and that here, this Chaldaism had been allowed to remain by the transcriber—see Houbigant in locum.

Again, with respect to the LXX version of this passage, (for as to the Arabic, it need not be taken into account, for the reasons before stated,) the difference between it and the last mentioned translation is not so great, as on the first view might appear. It is true, the reading of the LXX, as given in our Polyglot, is εαυ δωτε, if ye offer: but it is remarked by Bishop

* Mr. Dodson was here intended, as being the only person, who (at the date of the first publication of this work) had given to the public a version of Isaiah later than that of Bishop Lowth. But the observation equally applies to Bishop Stock, who has given the latest translation of the Prophet, and who has in like manner overlooked this remark: for whilst he renders the word in a passive sense, If his life shall be made a trespass-offering, he assigns for it a wrong reason; deriving the passive signification from a supposed reflexive import of the verb—should be made, or (he says) should render ITSELF, forgetting, that if this latter sense belonged to the verb, it would have been given in the form Hithpahel, which clearly is not that of the verb תשי. —Dathe's translation of the passage is decisive for the passive signification of the verb: Quodsi vita ejus ut sacrificium pro peccatis oblata fuerit.

Lowth, that some copies of the LXX read δωται, shall be offered; which agrees exactly with the Syriac. Indeed, as Mr. Dodson very properly observes, δωται may be considered the true reading of the LXX, not only on the authority of Clemens R. and Justin, who read it so; but also from the custom, which prevails in Greek MSS. of writing ε instead of αι. This practice is noticed by Walton, in his edition of Clem. R. (p. 142) on the words προτρειψετε ημας επ' αυτω, and is well known to all, who are conversant in Greek MSS as obtaining not only at the termination of words, as in the instance taken from Clemens, but in all parts of the word indifferently. This reading is likewise approved by Capellus.* Thus far then, (and this it is to be noted is the most important clause in the passage,) the disagreement between the LXX and the other ancient versions is done away. That it differs both from them, and the Hebrew text, in some other parts of the sentence, must be allowed; but that from an extensive collation of the several MSS. (which has now happily been at length undertaken*) even these differences may yet be removed, there is much reason to expect. The confirmation of the present reading of the Septuagint by the Arabic version, is by no means an argument against this; as that version is not above 900 years old, and may therefore have been derived from copies of the Septuagint, not the most perfect. Besides, it deserves to be remarked, that Bishop Lowth (Prelim. Diss.) pronounces the Septuagint version of Isaiah, to be inferior to that of any other book in the Old Testament; and in addition to this, to have come down to us in a condition exceedingly incorrect.

* "Aliquando diversitas citationis a LXX posita est in diversa lectione variantium Codd. Græcorum των LXX ut Esa. liii. 10, editio Sixtina των LXX habet, εαν δωτε περι αμαρτιας, si dederitis pro peccato, quæ corrupta est lectio. At Justinus cum quibusdam codicibus habet, εαν δωται, si datus fuerit, quæ genuina est lectio respondens Hebræo." Critica Sacra, Ludov. Capel. pp. 529, 530.

Upon the whole then, since the present state of the Hebrew text has been shewn to agree with the Syriac, the Vulgate, (both of which, it should be noted, were taken from the Hebrew; one in the first, the other in the fourth century,) with our English translation, and in a material part even with the LXX, we may judge, with what fairness, Dr. Priestley's rejection of the present text, on the ground of the disagreement of the translations with it and with each other,

* Unhappily, I must now add, the prosecution of that most valuable work, the completion of which was so eagerly anticipated at the date of the first publication of this treatise, has been interrupted by the stroke of death, (see p. 93.) so that the collation here alluded to still remains a mighty desideratum.

has been conducted. His omission of the Vulgate: his overlooking the marginal translation of our present, and the text of our older English Bibles, and pronouncing peremptorily on their contents in opposition to both: his stating the Arabic as a distinct testimony, concurring with the LXX: and his assertion, that the Syriac version of the Old Testament is confessed to be of little authority, when the direct contrary is the fact, it being esteemed by all biblical scholars as of the very highest:—and all this done to darken and discard a part of holy writ,—cannot but excite some doubt, as to the knowledge, or the candour, of the critic.

With respect to the Syriac version, Bishop Lowth, in his Prelim. Dissert. thus expresses himself. After describing the Chaldee paraphrase of Jonathan, which he states to have been made about or before the time of our Saviour, he says, “the Syriac stands next in order of time, but is superior to the Chaldee in usefulness and authority, as well in ascertaining, as in explaining, the Hebrew text: it is a close translation of the Hebrew, into a language of near affinity to it: it is supposed to have been made as early as the first century.”—Doctor Kennicot also (State of the Hebr. text, vol. ii. p. 355) speaks in the strongest terms of this version, “which he says, being very literal and very ancient, is of inestimable value :”—he concludes it to have been “made about the end of the first century, and that it might consequently have been made from Hebrew MSS. almost as old as those, which were before translated into Greek:” and he of course relies on it, for many of the most ancient and valuable readings. The language of De Rossi is, if possible, still stronger. “Versio hæc antiquissima ordinem ipsam verborum sacri textus et literam presse sectatur; et ex versionibus OMNIBUS antiquis purior ac tenacior habetur.” (Var. Lect. Vet. Test. Proleg. p. xxxii.) Dathe, also, both in his preface to the Syriac Psalter, and in his Opuscula, pronounces in the most peremptory terms in favour of the fidelity and the high antiquity of the Syriac Version. In the latter work particularly, he refers to it as a decisive standard by which to judge of the state of the Hebrew text in the second century. Dath. Opusc. Coll. a Rosenm. p. 171. In this high estimate of the * Syriac ver-

* Although I am here only concerned with the Syriac Version of the Old Testament, yet I cannot omit the opportunity of noticing a judicious and satisfactory defence of the high antiquity of what is called the Old Syriac Version of the New Testament, lately given to the public by Dr. Laurence. That this version, or the Peshito as it is usually named for distinction, was the production of the Apostolic age, or at least of that which immediately succeeded, had been the opinion of the most eminent critics both in early and modern times. The very learned J. D. Michaelis has maintained the same opinion, in his Introduction to the New

sion, these great criticks but coincide with the suffrages of Pocock, Walton, and all the most learned and profound Hebrew scholars, who in general ascribe it to the Apostolic age—(see Pocock. pref. to Micah. and Walton's Prolegom. 13.)—DR. PRIESTLEY however has said, that “it is confessed to be of little authority !!”—— I have dwelt much too long upon this point: but it is of importance that it should be well understood, what reliance is to be placed on the knowledge, and what credit to be given to the assertions, of a writer, whose theological opinions have obtained no small degree of circulation in the sister island, and whose confident assumption of critical superiority, and loud complaints against the alleged backwardness of divines of the established church in biblical investigation, might draw the unwary reader into an implicit admission of his gratuitous positions.

I come now to examine his objections against the second text—He made him SIN for us, who

Testament, vol. ii. p. 29—38. But in this he has not received the support of his English annotator, Mr. Marsh, who contends that we have no sufficient proof of the existence of this version at a period earlier than the fourth century, ibid. p. 551—554. Dr. Laurence has, however, clearly shewn, that Mr. Marsh's objections are not formidable; and has treated the subject in such a manner as to evince, that the alleged antiquity of the Version stands upon the strongest grounds of probability. See Laurence's Dissert. upon the Logos, p. 67—74.

knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.—In this passage, the word αμαρτια, which is translated SIN, is considered by Hammond, Le Clerc, Whitby, and every respectable Commentator, to mean a sin offering or sacrifice for sin: it is so translated expressly by Primate Newcome in his new Version. That this is the true meaning of the word, will readily be admitted, when it is considered that this is the application of it in the Hebrew idiom; and that Jews translating their own language into Greek, would give to the latter, the force of the corresponding words in the former. And that they have done so, is evident from the use of the word through the entire of the Greek version of the Old Testament, to which the Apostles, when speaking in Greek, would naturally have adhered. Dr. Middleton, in his answer to Dr. Bentley, remarks, that “the whole New Testament is written in a language peculiar to the Jews; and that the idiom is Hebrew or Syriac, though the words be Greek.” Michaelis also says, “the language of the New Testament is so intermixed with Hebraisms, that many native Greeks might have found it difficult to understand it.” (Introd. to N. T. vol. i. p. 100.) Ludovicus Capellus, (in speaking of the Greek translators of the Old Testament, whose style he says is followed by the writers of the New,) asks the question, “Quis nescit, verba quidem esse Græca, at phrases et sermonis structuram esse Hebræam?" (Crit. Sacr. p. 522.) And Doctor Campbell, in his Preliminary Dissertations, pronounces almost in the words of Capellus, "The phraseology is Hebrew, and the words are Greek." * The justice of these observations, * Ernesti affirms, "Stilus Novi Testamenti recte dicatur hebræo-græcus." See p. 82, Inst. Interp. Nov. Test. Indeed the observations of this writer (p. 73—88.) are particularly worthy of attention. If the reader should be desirous to see this curious and interesting subject of the style of the New Testament fully and satisfactorily handled, I refer him to the last named work; also to Michaelis's IVth chapter on the Language of the New Testament, (Introduction, &c. vol. i. p. 97—200) and particularly to Dr. Campbell's first and second Preliminary Dissertations to his Four Gospels, &c. At the same time, I must differ widely from Dr. Campbell, when he refers (as he does in p. 20. vol. i.) to the Bishop of Gloucester's Doctrine of Grace, for the best refutation of the objections against the inspiration of Scripture derived from the want of classic purity in its language. I would on the contrary direct the reader's attention to the Dissertation on the principles of Human Eloquence, in which the bold paradoxes of the Bishop are set aside, and the argument placed upon a sound and legitimate basis, by the learned Dr. Thomas Leland, formerly a Fellow of this University.

The Bishop, it is well known, had held, that the want of purity in the writings of the New Testament supplies in itself a proof of their divine original; and had defended this position upon reasons nearly subversive of every just notion of the nature of human eloquence. Dr. Leland, on the contrary, with a due regard to the principles of eloquence, as applying particularly to the expression in the present text, is evinced in numerous instances, adduced by Hammond and Whitby in locum. And to this very text, the passage from Isaiah, of taste, and of common sense, and in the direct maintenance of them all against the attacks of this formidable assailant, more discreetly and successfully contended for the truth of this proposition, that "whatever rudeness of style may be discoverable in the writings of the New Testament, it can afford neither proof nor presumption that the authors were not divinely inspired." See p. 97, or rather indeed the whole of the judicious discussion from p. 88 to p. 118 of the Dissertation. This drew forth a reply in defence of the Bishop, which was distinguished more for point and sarcasm than for ingenuity and strength. Suspicion early fixed upon Dr. Hurd as the author. The letters of Warburton and Hurd lately published, prove the suspicion to have been just. It appears also, that Warburton himself took considerable pains to have the pamphlet printed and circulated in Ireland, (Letters, &c. pp. 352. 354.) in the confident expectation, that the Irish Professor would be completely put to silence. The effect however was otherwise. The Professor returned to the charge with renovated vigour; and by a reply, distinguished by such ability as proved to the opposite party the inexpediency of continuing the contest, closed the controversy. How complete in the public opinion, was Dr. Leland's triumph over both his mitred opponents, may easily be collected from the fact, that however anxious to give extended circulation to the castigatory Letter before it received an answer, they both observed a profound silence upon the subject ever after; and that the Letter to Dr. Leland, remaining unacknowledged by the author, was indebted for its farther publicity to the very person against whom it was directed, who

which has just been discussed bears an exact correspondence: for, as in that his soul, or life, was to be made $\Theta\psi\chi\eta$, αμαρτια, or as the LXX render it, περι αμαρτιας, a sin offering,* so here deemed it not inexpedient, in a new edition of his tracts, to give it a place between the Dissertation which caused it and the defence which it occasioned. The critical decisions of the day were decidedly in favour of Dr. Leland. A late Review pronounces, that Leland “in the opinion of all the world completely demolished his antagonist.” (Edinb. Rev. vol. xiii. p. 358.) The Critical reviews for July and November, 1764, contain some masterly pieces of criticism upon the Dissertation and the Letter. But in no work is there a more striking or more honourable testimony borne to Dr. Leland’s superiority in this controversy, than in that which is entitled Tracts by Warburton and a Warburtonian; particularly in the Dedication and Preface prefixed to the Two Tracts, which the eloquent editor describes as “Children, whom their parents were afraid or ashamed to acknowledge,” and which he therefore (compassionately it certainly cannot be said) determines to present to the public notice. Of these Two Tracts Dr. Hurd’s well known Letter to Dr. Jortin On the delicacy of friendship is one, and his Letter to Dr. Leland is the other: and on the subject of these tracts, by which, it is added, Warburton was most extravagantly flattered, Leland most petulantly insulted, and Jortin most inhumanly vilified, severe justice is inflicted upon the author, by the indignant vindicator of the two respectable characters that had been so

* In reference probably to the very words in this passage it is, that our Saviour declares, (Matt. xx. 28.) that he gave την ψυχην αυτην λυτρον αντι πολλων, or as St. Paul afterwards expresses it, (1 Tim. ii. 6.) αντιλυτρον υπερ παντων.

Christ is said to have been made αμαρτια, a sin offering; and for us, as it must have been from what is immediately after added, that HE knew no sin. For the exact coincidence between these unworthily attacked. General opinion has long appropriated this publication to a name of no mean note in the republic of Letters. Undoubtedly the vigour of conception, the richness of imagery, and the splendour of diction, displayed in those parts of the work which the Editor claims as his own, are such as must reflect honour upon any name. At the same time, it is much to be lamented, that talents and attainments of so high an order as manifestly belong to the writer, should have been devoted to purposes so little congenial with the feelings of benevolence: and that the same spirit, which pressed forward with such generous ardour to cast the shield over one reputation, should direct the sword with such fierce hostility against another; and exult in inflicting the very species of wound, which it was its highest glory to repel.

The eulogium pronounced upon Dr. Leland, I here seize the opportunity of extracting from this performance. It is sketched by the hand of a master, and is too creditable to the memory of the individual, to be passed over by any one who takes an interest in what relates either to the man, or to the University of which he was an ornament. "Of Leland, my opinion is not, like the Letter-writer's, founded upon hear-say evidence; nor is it determined solely by the great authority of Dr. Johnson, who always mentioned Dr. Leland with cordial regard and with marked respect. It might, perhaps, be invidious for me to hazard a favourable decision upon his History of Ireland; because the merits of that work have been disputed by critics; some of whom, are, I think, warped in their judgments, by literary, others by national, and more, I have reason to be-passages, Vitringa (Isai. liii. 10) deserves particularly to be consulted. Among other valuable observations, he shews, that περι αμαρτιας, υπερ αμαρτιας, and αμαρτια, are all used by the lieve, by personal prejudices. But I may with confidence appeal to Writings, which have long contributed to public amusement, and have often been honoured by public approbation:—to the Life of Philip, and to the Translation of Demosthenes, which the Letter-writer professes to have not read,—to the judicious Dissertation upon Eloquence, which the Letter-writer did vouchsafe to read, before he answered it,—to the spirited Defence of that Dissertation which the Letter-writer, probably, has read, but never attempted to answer. The Life of Philip contains many curious researches into the principles of government established among the leading states of Greece: many sagacious remarks on their intestine discords: many exact descriptions of their most celebrated characters, together with an extensive and correct view of those subtle intrigues, and those ambitious projects, by which Philip, at a favourable crisis, gradually obtained an unexampled and fatal mastery over the Grecian Republics. In the Translation of Demosthenes, Leland unites the man of taste, with the man of learning, and shews himself to have possessed, not only a competent knowledge of the Greek language, but that clearness in his own conceptions, and that animation in his feelings, which enabled him to catch the real meaning, and to preserve the genuine spirit, of the most perfect orator that Athens ever produced. Through the Dissertation upon Eloquence, and the Defence of it, we see great accuracy of erudition, great perspicuity and strength of style, and, above all, a stoutness of judgment, which, in traversing the open and spacious walks of literature, Greek writers, among the Jews, in the same sense. Several decisive instances of this in the New Testament, are pointed out by Schleusner, on the word μαρτυρια.

disdained to be led captive, either by the sorceries of a self-deluded visionary, or the decrees of a self-created despot." Tracts by Warburton and a Warburtonian, pp. 193, 194.—In the very year, in which these observations on Dr. Leland's literary character were given to the public, three volumes of his Sermons issued from the Dublin press; and, though posthumous, and consequently not touched by the finishing hand of the author, they exhibit a specimen of pulpit eloquence, not unworthy of the Translator of Demosthenes and the Historian of Ireland. To these Sermons there is prefixed a brief but interesting and well-written life of the author, from which it appears, that the amount of his literary productions exceeded what have been here enumerated.—The extract which I have made from the Tracts, although I do not accede to its justice in every particular, being disposed to attribute some-what less to the Translation of Demosthenes, and a vast deal more to the History of Ireland, yet I could not deny myself the gratification of noticing, in connexion with the name of Leland; not only, as being highly creditable to the memory of a distinguished member of the University with which I am myself so closely connected; but, as supplying one of the few instances, in which a provincial writer of this part of the empire has obtained due honour in the sister country.—In concluding this long note, which has been almost exclusively dedicated to Doctor Leland, I cannot forbear asking the question, whether it is to be ascribed to ignorance or to fraud, that in a recent London edition of his Translation of the Orations of Demosthenes, (viz. 1806.) his designation in the title is that of Fellow of Tri-

Now from this plain and direct sense of the passage in 2 Cor. supported by the known use of the word αμαρτια in Scripture language, and maintained by the ablest Commentators on Scripture, Dr. Priestley thinks proper to turn away, and to seek in a passage of Romans (viii. 3.) to which this by no means necessarily refers, a new explanation, which better suits his theory, and which, as usual with him, substitutes a figurative, in place of the obvious, and literal sense. Thus, because in Romans, God is said to have sent his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, εν ομοιωματι σαρκος αμαρτιας, he would infer, that when in 2 Cor. God is said to have made him sin, it is merely meant that God had made him in the likeness of sinful flesh. Nor is he content with this unwarrantable departure from the language of the text, but he would also insinuate (Th. Rep. vol. i. p. 128.) that the words περι αμαρτιας, which occur in the text in Romans, and which, we have already remarked, are commonly used in Scripture language for a sin offering, and are so rendered in this place by Primate Newcome, merely imply for us, availing himself of our present version, which translates the words, for sin. Such vague and nity College, OXFORD. Was the translation of the Greek orator supposed too good to have come from Ireland; or was it imagined, that the knowledge of its true origin would diminish the profits of its circulation?

uncritical expositions of Scripture may serve any purpose, but the cause of truth. I have already dwelt longer upon them than they deserve: and shall now dismiss them without farther remark.

NO. XXVIII.—ON THE WORD ΚΑΤΑΛΛΑΓΗ TRANSLATED AS ATONEMENT IN ROM. V. 11.

PAGE 29. (d)—The word καταλλαγή, which is here translated atonement, it is remarked by Sykes, (On Redemp. pp. 56, 201.) and H. Taylor, (B. Mord. p. 807.) and others who oppose the received doctrine of the atonement, should not have been so rendered, but should have been translated reconciliation. The justice of this remark I do not scruple to admit. The use of the verb and participle in the former verse, seems to require this translation. And this being the single passage in the New Testament, in which it is so rendered, being elsewhere uniformly translated reconciling or reconciliation, (Rom. ch. xi. 15. 2 Cor. v. 18, 19.) and being no where used by the LXX in speaking of the legal atonements, and moreover there being an actual impropriety in the expression, WE have RECEIVED * the atonement, I feel no difficulty in adopting this correction.

* It will be worth the while of those commentators, who contend, (as we have noticed in Number XX.) that the

But whilst I agree with these writers, in the use of the word reconciliation in this passage, I differ from them entirely in the inference they would derive from it. Their notion of reconciliation altogether excludes the idea of propitiation and atonement, as may be seen in Number XX. pp. 202, 203, whereas by these, it is manifest both from the reason of the thing and the express language of Scripture, reconciliation is alone to be effected, as is proved in the same Number. It deserves also to be observed, that though the word atonement is not used in our version of the New Testament, except in the single instance already referred to, yet in the original, the same, or words derived from the same root, with that which the LXX commonly use when speaking of the legal atonement, are not infrequently employed in treating of the death of Christ. Thus ιλασκομαι and εξιλασκομαι, which signify to appease, or make propitious, are almost always used by the LXX for כפר, which by translators is sometimes rendered to make atonement for, and sometimes to reconcile: and in Hebrews ii. 17. we find it said of reconciliation spoken of in the N. T. means only our being reconciled to God, or laying aside our enmity against him, —to consider, in what sense we are said, in this passage, to have RECEIVED the reconciliation. What rules of language can they adopt, who talk of a man's receiving the laying aside of his own enmities.

our Lord, that he was a merciful and faithful high Priest, to make reconciliation for (εις το ιλασκεσθαι) the sins of the people; and again, he is twice in 1 John, entitled ιλασμος, a propitiation, &c. see Number XXVI. p. 220. Now in all these, the word atonement might with propriety have been used; and as the reconciliation which we have received through Christ, was the effect of the atonement made for us by his death, words which denote the former simply, as καταλλαγη and words derived from the same root, may when applied to the sacrifice of Christ, be not unfitly expressed by the latter, as containing in them its full import.

NO. XXIX.—ON THE DENIAL THAT CHRIST'S DEATH IS DESCRIBED IN SCRIPTURE AS A SIN OFFERING.

PAGE 30. (e)—I have, in the page here referred to, adopted the very words of Dr. Priestley himself. (Theol. Rep. v. i. 123.) Dr. Priestley, however, is far from admitting the death of Christ, to be of the nature of a sin-offering. That it is but compared in figure to that species of sacrifice, is all that he thinks proper to concede.—H. Taylor (Ben. Mord. p. 811—821) contends strenuously, and certainly with as much ingenuity as the case will admit, in support of the same point.—What has been urged, in Number XXVII. upon this head, will however I trust be found sufficient. At all events, it furnishes a direct reply, to an argument used by the former of these writers, (Theol. Rep. vol. i. pp. 128, 129.) in which, for the purpose of proving that the “death of Christ was no proper sacrifice for sin, or the antitype of the Jewish sacrifices,” he maintains, that “though the death of Christ is frequently mentioned or alluded to by the Prophets, it is never spoken of as a sin-offering :” and to establish this position, he relies principally on his interpretation of Isai. liii. 10, which has been fully examined and refuted in the aforementioned Number.

In addition to what has been advanced, in that Number, upon the other text discussed in it, namely 2 Cor. v. 21, I wish here to notice the observations of Dr. Macknight and Rosenmüller. The note of the former upon it is this: “Ἀμαρτιαν, a sin-offering. There are many passages in the Old Testament, where ἁμαρτια, sin, signifies a sin-offering. Hosea iv. 8. They (the priests) eat up the sins (that is, the sin-offerings) of my people.—In the New Testament likewise, the word sin hath the same signification, Heb. ix. 26. 28. xiii. 11.”—To the same purport, but more at large, Pilkington, in his Remarks, &c. pp. 163, 164.—Rosenmüller observes as follows, “Ἀμαρτια, victima pro peccato, ut Hebr. אִשָּׁה Levit. vii. 2. חַטָּאת et חַטָּאת, quod sæpe elliptice ponitur pro כַּחֲטָאתוֹ, ut Ps. xl. 7, Exod. xxix. 14. pro quo LXX usurpant περί αμαρτίας, sc. θυσία, Levit. v. 8. 9. 11. aliisque locis. Aliis abstractum est pro concreto, et subaudiendum est ὡσε, pro: ὡς αμαρτανοντα ἐποίησεν, tractavit eum ut peccatorem; se gessit erga eum, uti erga peccatorem. Sensus est idem."

NO. XXX.—ON THE SENSE IN WHICH CHRIST IS SAID IN SCRIPTURE TO HAVE DIED FOR US.

PAGE 30. (f)—Dr. Priestley's remarks on this subject deserve to be attended to, as they furnish a striking specimen of the metaphysical ingenuity, with which the rational expositors of the present day, are able to extricate themselves from the shackles of Scripture language. Christ being frequently said in Scripture to have died FOR us, he tells us that this is to be interpreted, dying on our account, or for our benefit. "Or if, he adds, when rigorously interpreted, it should be found, that if Christ had not died, we must have died, it is still however only consequentially so, and by no means properly and directly so, as a substitute for us: for if in consequence of Christ's not having been sent to instruct and reform the world, mankind had continued unreformed; and the necessary consequence of Christ's coming, was his death by whatever means, and in whatever manner it was brought about: it is plain, that there was, in fact, no other alternative but his death or ours; how naturally then was it, especially to writers accustomed to the strong figurative expression of the East, to say that he died IN OUR STEAD, without meaning it in a strict and proper sense?"—Hist. of Cor. vol. i. p. 199.

Here then we see, that had the sacred writers every where represented Christ, as dying in our stead, yet it would have amounted to no more, than dying on our account, or for our benefit, just as under the present form of expression. And thus Dr. Priestley has proved to us, that no form of expression whatever, would be proof against the species of criticism, which he has thought proper to employ: for it must be remembered, that the want of this very phrase, dying in our stead, has been urged as a main argument, against the notion of a strict propitiatory sacrifice in the death of Christ. To attempt to prove then, in opposition to those who use this argument, that when Christ is said in Scripture to have died for us, it is meant that he died instead of us, must be in this writer's opinion a waste of time: since, when this is accomplished, we are in his judgment only where we set out. As however there have been some, who, not possessing Dr. Priestley's metaphysical powers, have thought this acceptation of the word for, conclusive in favour of the received doctrine of atonement, and have therefore taken much pains to oppose it, I will hope to be excused, if I deem it necessary to reply to these writers.

Dr. Sykes, in his Essay on Redemption, and H. Taylor, in his Ben. Mord. pp. 786, 787. have most minutely examined all the passages in the New Testament, in which the preposition for is introduced. And the result of their examination is, that in all those passages, which speak of Christ, as having given himself for us, for our sins, having died for us, &c. the word for must be considered as on account of, for the benefit of, and not instead of. The ground, on which this conclusion is drawn, as stated by the latter, is this; that “if the true doctrine be, that these things were done upon our account, or for our advantage, the word for will have the same sense in all the texts: but if the true doctrine be, that they were done instead of, the sense of the word will not be the same in the different texts.”—But surely this furnishes no good reason, for deciding in favour of the former doctrine. The word for, or the Greek words αντι, υπερ, δια, περι, of which it is the translation, admitting of different senses, may of course be differently applied, according to the nature of the subject, and yet the doctrine remain unchanged. Thus it might be perfectly proper to say, that Christ suffered instead of us, although it would be absurd to say, that he suffered instead of our offences. It is sufficient, if the different applications of the word carry a consistent meaning. To die instead of us, and to die on account of our offences, perfectly agree. But this change of the expression necessarily arises from the change of the subject. And accordingly, the same difficulty will be found to attach to the exposition proposed by these writers: since the word for, interpreted on account of, i. e. for the benefit of, cannot be applied in the same sense in all the texts. For, although dying for our benefit is perfectly intelligible, dying for the benefit of our offences is no less absurd than dying instead of our offences.

The only inference that could with justice have been drawn by these writers is, that the word for does not necessarily imply substitution in all these passages, and that therefore it is not sufficient to lay a ground for the doctrine, which implies that substitution. But that, on the other hand, it is evident that it does not imply it in any, can by no means be contended: the word $\upsilon\pi\epsilon\rho$, being admitted to have that force frequently in its common application; as may be seen in Plato Conviv. p. 1197, and again 1178, where $\alpha\pi\theta\nu\eta\sigma\kappa\epsilon\iota\nu\ \upsilon\pi\epsilon\rho$, is manifestly used for dying in stead, or place of another.—That the Greeks were accustomed by this expression to imply a vicarious death, Raphelius on Rom. v. 8. directly asserts; and produces several indisputable instances from Xenophon, in which υπερ and αντι have the force of substitution. * In like

* Raphelius's observations upon this subject are so valuable, that I apprehend his entire note will be acceptable to the critical reader.—“Rom. v. 8. Υπερ ημων απεθανε—id est αντι, loco, vice nostrá mortuus est, ut nos mortis pœna liberaremur. Vicarium enim mortem hoc loquendi genere Græci declarant. Neque Socinianis, qui secus interpretantur, quenquam ex Græcis credo assensorem esse. Nostræ sententiæ Xenophon adstipulatur. Nam cum Seuthes puerum formosum bello captum occidere vellet, Episthenes autem, puerorum amator, se pro illius more deprecatorum præberet, rogat Seuthes Episthenem: Η και θελοις αν, ω επισθενες, ΥΠΕΡ ΤΟΥΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΘΑΝΕΙΝ; Vellesne, mi Episthenes, PRO HOC MORI? Cumque is nihil dubitaret pro pueri vita cervicem præbere, Seuthes vicissim puerum interrogat, ει παισειεν αυτον ΑΝΤΙ εκεινθ; num hunc feriri PRO SE vellet? De Exped. Cyri, &c.—Et Hist. Græc. &c. Προειπων δε ο Αγεσιλαος, οσις παρεχοιτο ιππον και οπλα και ανδρα δοκιμον, οτι ιξεσι αυτω μη στρατευσθαι, ειποιησεν υτω ταυτα συντομως πραττεσθαι, ωσπερ αν τις τον ΥΠΕΡ ΑΥΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΘΑΝΟΥΜΕΝΟΝ προθυμως ζητοιη. Quumque Agesilaus denunciasset fore, ut, quicumque daret equum et arma et peritum hominem, immunis esset a militiâ: effecit, ut hæc non aliter magna celeritate facerent, atque si quis alacriter aliquem suo loco moriturum quæreret. De Venat. pag. 768. Αντιλοχος τη πατρος ΥΠΕΡΑΠΟΘΑΝΩΝ, τοσαυτης ευχεν ευκλειας, ωσε μονος φιλοπατωρ παρα τοις Ελλησιν αναγορευθηναι. Antilochus PRO PATRE morti sese obijciens, tantum gloriæ consecutus est, ut solus apud Græcos amans patris appelletur.—Et quid opus est aliis exemplis? cum luculentissimum sit, Joh. xi. 50. ubi mortuus dicitur Salvator manner, (2 Sam. xviii. 33.) when David saith concerning Absalom, τις δωη τον θανατον με αντισε, there is clearly expressed David's wish, that his death had gone instead of Absalom's.

But indeed this force of the word neither can be, nor is, denied by the writers alluded to. The actual application of the term then, in the several passages, in which Christ is said to have died for us, to have suffered for us, &c. is to be decided by the general language of Scripture upon that subject. And if it appears from its uniform tenor, that Christ submitted himself to suffering and death, that thereby we might be saved from undergoing the punishment of our transgressions, will it not follow, that Christ's suffering stood in the place of ours, even though it might not be of the same nature, in any respect, with that which we were to have undergone, υπερ τε λαου. Quod quale sit, mox exponitur, ινα μη ολον το εθνος αποληται." Raphelii Annot. tom. ii. pp. 253, 254.

How forcibly the word υπερ is felt to imply substitution is indirectly admitted in the strongest manner even by Unitarians themselves: the satisfaction manifested by Commentators of that description, whenever they can escape from the emphatical bearing of this preposition, is strikingly evinced in their late Version of the New Testament. See their observations on Gal. i. 4.

NO. XXXI.—ON THE PRETENCE OF FIGURATIVE ALLUSION IN THE SACRIFICIAL TERMS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

PAGE 30. (g)—On the whole of this pretence of figurative applications, whereby H. Taylor, (B. Mord.) Dr. Priestley, and others endeavour to escape from the plain language of Scripture, it may be worth while to notice a distinction, which has been judiciously suggested upon this subject, by Mr. Veysie. (Bampt. Lecture, Sermon 5.)—Figurative language, he says, does not arise from the real nature of the thing to which it is transferred, but only from the imagination of him who transfers it. Thus a man, who possesses the quality of courage in an eminent degree, is figuratively called a lion; not because the real nature of a lion belongs to him, but because the quality which characterizes this animal is possessed by him in an eminent degree: therefore the imagination conceives them as partakers of one common nature, and applies to them one common name. Now to suppose, that language, if it cannot be literally interpreted, must necessarily be of the figurative kind here described, that is, applied only by way of allusion, is erroneous; since there is also a species of language, usually called analogical, which though not strictly pro- per, is far from being merely figurative: the terms being transferred from one thing to another, not because the things are similar, but because they are in similar relations. And the term thus transferred, he contends, is as truly significant of the real nature of the thing in the relation in which it stands, as it could be were it the primitive and proper word. With this species of language, he observes, Scripture abounds.

And indeed so it must; for if the one dispensation was really intended to be preparatory to the other, the parallelism of their parts, or their several analogies, must have been such, as necessarily to introduce the terms of the one, into the explanation of the other.—Of this Mr. V. gives numerous instances. I shall only adduce that, which immediately applies to the case before us: viz. that of “the death of Christ being called in the New Testament, a sacrifice and sin-offering. This, says he, is not as the Socinian hypothesis asserts, figuratively, or merely in allusion to the Jewish sacrifices, but analogically, because the death of Christ is to the Christian Church, what the sacrifices for sin were to the worshippers of the Tabernacle:” (or perhaps it might be more correctly expressed, because the sacrifices for sin were so appointed, that they should be to the worshippers of the Tabernacle, what it had been ordained the death of Christ was to be to the Christian Church:.) “And accordingly, the language of the New Testament does not contain mere figurative allusions to the Jewish sacrifices, but ascribes a real and immediate efficacy to Christ's death, an efficacy corresponding to that, which was anciently produced by the legal sin-offerings." This view of the matter will, I apprehend, be found to convey a complete answer, to all that has been said upon this subject, concerning figure, allusion, &c.

Indeed some distinction of this nature is absolutely necessary. For under the pretence of figure, we find those writers, who would reject the doctrine of atonement, endeavour to evade the force of texts of Scripture, the plainest and most positive.—Thus Dr. Priestley (Hist. of Cor. vol. i. p. 214) asserts, that the death of Christ may be called a sacrifice for sin, and a ransom; and also that Christ may in general be said to have died in our stead, and to have borne our sins: and that figurative language, even stronger than this, may be used by persons, who do not consider the death of Christ, as having any immediate relation to the forgiveness of sins, but believe only, that it was a necessary circumstance in the scheme of the gospel, and that this scheme was necessary to reform the world.—That however there are parts of Scripture, which have proved too powerful, even for the figurative solutions of the Historian of the Corruptions of Christianity, may be inferred from this remarkable concession. "In this then let us acquiesce, not doubting but that, though not perhaps at present, we shall in time be able, without any effort or straining, to explain all particular expressions in the apostolical epistles, &c." (Hist. of Cor. vol. i. p. 279.)—Here is a plain confession on the part of Dr. Priestley, that those enlightened theories, in which he and his followers exult so highly, are wrought out of Scripture only by effort and straining: and that all the powers of this polemic Procrustes, have been exerted to adjust the apostolic stature to certain pre-ordained dimensions, and in some cases exerted in vain.

The reader is requested to compare what has been here said, with what has been already noticed in Numbers I and XIV, on the treatment given to the authority of Scripture by Dr. Priestley and his Unitarian fellow-labourers.

NO. XXXII.—ARGUMENTS TO PROVE THE SACRIFICIAL LANGUAGE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT FIGURATIVE, URGED BY H. TAYLOR AND DR. PRIESTLEY.

Page 30. (h)—The several arguments enumerated in the page here referred to, are urged at large, and with the utmost force of which they are capable, in the 7th Letter of Ben Mordecai's Apology, by H. Taylor.—Dr. Priestley has also endeavoured to establish the same point, and by arguments not much dissimilar. Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 121—136.

NO. XXXIII.—ON THE SENSE ENTERTAINED GENERALLY BY ALL, AND MORE ESPECIALLY INSTANCED AMONGST THE JEWS, OF THE NECESSITY OF PROPITIATORY EXPIATION.

PAGE 31. (i)—The last of the three arguments here referred to, is urged by H. Taylor (Ben. Mord. pp. 784, 785. 797) as applied particularly to the notion of vicarious sacrifice: but it is clear from the whole course of his reasoning, that he means it to apply to all sacrifice, of a nature properly expiatory; that is, in which by the suffering and death of the victim, the displeasure of God was averted from the person for whom it was offered, and the punishment due to his offence remitted, whether the suffering of the victim was supposed to be strictly of a vicarious nature or not.

Such a notion of sacrifice applied to the death of Christ, this writer ascribes to the engrafting of Heathenish notions on Jewish customs; whereby the language of the Jews came to be interpreted, by the customs and ceremonies of the Heathen philosophers, who had been converted to Christianity. Whether this notion be well founded, will appear from the examination of the origin of sacrifice, in the second of these Discourses, and from some of the Explanatory Dissertations connected with it. But it is curious to remark, how Dr. Priestley and this author, whilst they agree in the result, differ in their means of arriving at it. This author traces the notion of sacrifice strictly expiatory, to heathen interpretation. Dr. Priestley on the contrary asserts, that the Heathens had no idea whatever of such sacrifice. He employs almost one entire essay in the Theological Repository (vol. i. p. 400, &c.) in the proof, that in no nation, ancient or modern, has such an idea ever existed: and, as we have already seen in Number V, pronounces it to be the unquestionable result of an historical examination of this subject, that all, whether Jews or Heathens, antient or modern, learned or unlearned, have been “equally strangers to the notion of expiatory sacrifice; equally destitute of any thing like a doctrine of proper atonement.” To pass over, at present, this gross contradiction to all the records of antiquity, how shall we reconcile this gentleman to the other? or, which is of greater importance, how shall we reconcile him to himself? For whilst in this place he maintains, that neither antient nor modern Jews ever conceived an idea of expiatory sacrifice, he contends in another, (ibid. p. 426) that this notion has arisen from the circumstance, of the simple religion of Christ having been "entrusted to such vessels, as were the Apostles:" for, adds he, "the Apostles were Jews, and had to do with Jews, and consequently represented Christianity in a Jewish dress,"—and this more particularly, "in the business of sacrifices."—Now, if the Jews had no notion whatever of expiatory sacrifice, it remains to be accounted for, how the cloathing the Christian doctrine of redemption in a Jewish dress, could have led to this notion. It is true, he adds, that over the Jewish disguise, which had been thrown on this doctrine by the Apostles, another was drawn by Christians. But if the Jewish dress bore no relation to a doctrine of atonement, then the Christian disguise is the only one. And thus the Christians have deliberately, without any foundation laid for them, either by Heathens or Jews, superinduced the notion of an expiatory sacrifice, on the simple doctrines of the Gospel: converting figurative language, into a literal exposition of what was known never to have had a real existence!!!

To leave however this region of contradictions, it may not be unimportant to enquire into the facts, which have been here alleged by Dr. Priestley. And it must be allowed, that he has crowded into this one Essay, as many assertions at variance with received opinion, as can easily be found, comprized in the same compass, on any subject whatever. He has asserted, that no trace of any scheme of atonement, or of any requisite for forgiveness save repentance and reformation, is to be discovered either in the book of Job; or in the Scriptures of the antient, or any writings of the modern Jews; or amongst the Heathen world, either ancient or modern.—These assertions, as they relate to Job, and the religion of the Heathens, have been already examined; the former in Number XXIII. the latter in Number V. An enquiry into his position, as it affects the Jews, with some farther particulars concerning the practices of the Heathen, will fully satisfy us, as to the degree of reliance to be placed on this writer's historical exactness.

With respect to the sentiments of the antient Jews, or in other words, the sense of the Old Testament upon the subject, that being the main question discussed in these Discourses, especially the second, no enquiry is in this place necessary: it will suffice at present to examine the writings of the Jews of later times, and we shall find that these give the most direct contradiction to his assertions. He has quoted Maimonides, Nachmanides, Abarbanel, Buxtorf and Isaac Netto, and concludes with confidence, that among the modern Jews no notion has ever existed, “of any kind of mediation being necessary, to reconcile the claims of justice with those of mercy:” or, as he elsewhere expresses it, of “any satisfaction beside re-penance being necessary to the forgiveness of sin." (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 409—411.)—Now in direct opposition to this, it is notorious, that the stated confession made by the Jews, in offering up the victim in sacrifice, concludes with these words, *let this (the victim) be my expiation. And this the Jewish writers directly interpret as meaning, "let the evils which in justice should have fallen on my head, light upon the head of the victim which I now offer." Thus Baal Aruch says, that "wherever the expression, let me be another's expiation, is used, it is the same as if it had been said, let me be put in his room, that I may bear his guilt : and this again is equivalent to saying, let this act whereby I take on me his transgression, obtain for him his pardon." In like manner, Solomon Jarchi (Sanhedr. ch. 2.) says, "Let us be your expiation, signifies, let us be put in your place, that the evil which should have fallen upon you may all light on us :" and in the same way, Obadiah de Bartenora, and other learned Jews, explain this formula.

Again, respecting the burnt offerings, and sacrifices for sin, Nachmanides, on Levit. i. says, that "it was right, that the offerer's own blood should be shed, and his body burnt: but that the Creator, in his mercy, hath accepted this victim from him, as a vicarious substitute (תמורה), and an atonement (כפר), that its blood should be poured out instead of his blood, and its life stand in place of his life." R. Bechai also, on Lev. i. uses the very same language. Isaac Ben Arama, on Leviticus, likewise says, that "the offender, when he beholds the victim, on account of his sin, slain, skinned, cut in pieces, and burnt with fire upon the altar, should reflect, that thus he must have been treated, had not God in his clemency accepted this expiation for his life." David de Pomis, in like manner, pronounces the victim, the vicarious substitute (תמורה) for the offerer. And Isaac Abarbanel affirms, in his preface to Levit. that "the offerer deserved, that his blood should be poured out, and his body burnt for his sins; but that God, in his clemency, accepted from him the victim as his vicarious substitute (תמורה), and expiation (כפר), whose blood was poured out in place of his blood, and its life given in lieu of his life."

* See the form of confession in Maim. de Cult. Divin. de Veil. pp. 152, 153.

I should weary the reader and myself, were I to adduce all the authorities on this point. Many more may be found in Outram de Sacrificiis, p. 251—259. These however will probably satisfy most readers, as to the fairness of the representation which Dr. Priestley has given, of the notion entertained by modern Jews concerning the doctrine of atonement, and of their total ignorance of any satisfaction for sin, save only repentance and amendment.—One thing there is in this review, that cannot but strike the reader, as it did me, with surprise: that is, that of the three writers of eminence among the Jewish Rabbis, whom Dr. Priestley has named, Maimonides, Abarbanel and Nachmanides, the two last, as is manifest from the passages already cited, maintain in direct terms the strict notion of atonement: and though Maimonides has not made use of language equally explicit, yet on due examination it will appear, that he supplies a testimony by no means inconsistent with that notion.—Dr. Priestley's method of managing the testimonies furnished by these writers, will throw considerable light upon his mode of reasoning from antient authors in support of his favourite theories. It will not then be time misemployed, to follow him somewhat more minutely through his examination of them.

He begins with stating, that Maimonides considered sacrifice to be merely an Heathen ceremony, adopted by the Divine Being into his own worship, for the gradual abolition of idolatry. This opinion, he says, was opposed by R. Nachmanides, and defended by Abarbanel, who explains the nature of sacrifice, as offered by Adam and his children, in this manner—viz. “They burned the fat and the kidneys of the victims upon the altar, for their own inwards, being the seat” (not, as it is erroneously given in Theol. Rep. as the seal) “of their intentions and purposes; and the legs of the victims for their own hands and feet ; and they sprinkled their blood, instead of their own blood and life, confessing that in the sight of God, the just judge of things, the blood of the offerers should be shed, and their bodies burnt for their sins—but that through the mercy of God, expiation was made for them by the victim being put in their place, by whose blood and life, the blood and life of the offerers were redeemed." Exordium Comment. in Levit. De Veil. pp. 291, 292.) Now it deserves to be noted, that Sykes, whose assistance Dr. Priestley has found of no small use, in his attempts upon the received doctrine of atonement, deemed the testimony of this Jewish writer, conveyed in the above form of expression, so decisive, that without hesitation he pronounces him to have held the notion of a vicarious substitute, in the strictest acceptation, (Essay on Sacrifices, pp. 121, 122.) and, that the sense of the Jewish Rabbis at large is uniformly in favour of atonement by strict vicarious substitution, he feels himself compelled to admit, by the overbearing force of their own declarations, although his argument would have derived much strength from an opposite conclusion. (Ibid. pp. 149, 150. 157, 158.) The same admission is made by the author of the Scripture Account of Sacrifices, (Append. pp. 17, 18.) notwithstanding it is equally repugnant to the principles of his theory. But, after stating the passage last quoted, at full length, what is Dr. Priestley's remark?—That “all this is evidently figurative, the act of sacrificing being represented, as emblematical of the sentiments and language of the offerer.” And the argument, by which he establishes this, is, that “this writer could never think, that an animal could make proper satisfaction for sin,” &c. What then is Dr. Priestley's argument?—The modern Jews have never entertained an idea, of any expiation for sin save repentance only; for we are told by Abarbanel, that expiation was made for the offerer by the victim being put in his place; and by this he did not mean, that the animal made expiation for the sin of the sacrificer, because he could never think that an animal could make satisfaction for sin!! Now might not this demonstration have been abridged to much advantage, and without endangering in any degree the force of the proof, by putting it in this manner?—Abarbanel did hold, that by the sacrifice of an animal, no expiation could be made for sin, for it is impossible that he could have thought otherwise.

Complete as this proof is in itself, Dr. Priestley however does not refuse us still farther confirmation of his interpretation of this writer's testimony. He tells us, that “he repeats the observation already quoted from him, in a more particular account of sacrifices for sins committed through ignorance, such as casual uncleanness, &c. in which no proper guilt could be contracted :” and that he also “ considers sin-offerings-as fines, or mulcts, by way of admonitions not to offend again.” (Theol. Rep. v. i. p. 410.)—Now, as to the former of these assertions, it is to be noted, that Abarbanel, in the passage referred to, is speaking of an error of the High Priest, which might be attended with the most fatal consequences by misleading the people, perhaps in some of the most essential points of their religion. And as the want of sufficient knowledge, or of due consideration, in him who was to expound the law, and to direct the people to what was right, must be considered as a degree of audacity highly criminal, for which he says the offender deserved to be punished with death, ignorance not being admissible in such a case as an excuse, therefore it was, that the sin-offering was required of him, “ the mercy of God accepting the sacrifice of the animal in his stead, and appointing that in offering he should place his hands on the animal, to remind him that the victim was received as his (תמורה) vicarious substitute.” (De Veil. Exord. p. 313—317.) For the same reasons, he says, (p. 317) the same method was to be observed in the sin-offering of the Sanhedrim; and he adds also (p. 325) that “ in the case of an error committed by a private person, whereby he had fallen into any idolatrous practice, the sin-offering appointed for him was to be of the same nature exactly, and the animal offered the same, as in the case of a similar error in the High Priest or the Prince: and for this reason, that although in all other offences, the criminality of the High Priest or Prince exceeded that of a private individual, yet in this, all were equal; for the unity of the true God having been proclaimed to all the people, at Sinai, no one was excusable in his ignorance of this fundamental truth.*

Thus the crimes of ignorance, of which this writer speaks in the passages referred to, are evidently not of the nature represented by Dr. Priestley, namely casual and accidental lapses, in which no proper guilt could be contracted: and consequently his argument, which, from the application of the same form of sacrifice to these cases as to those in which guilt did exist, would infer, that in none was it the intention by the sacrifice to make expiation for transgression, must necessarily fall to the ground. Had however Dr. Priestley taken the pains to make himself better acquainted with the works of the writer, whose authority he has cited in support of his opinion, he would never have risked the observations just now alluded to. He would have found, that in the opinion of this, as well as of every other, Jewish writer of eminence, even those cases of defilement, which were involuntary, such as leprosy, child-bearing, &c. uniformly implied an idea of guilt. Thus Abarbanel, speaking of the case of puerperity in the 12th chapter of Leviticus, says, that “without committing sin no one is ever exposed to suffering; that it is a principle with the Jewish Doctors, that there is no pain without crime, and that therefore the woman who had endured the pains of childbirth, was required to offer a piacular sacrifice.” And again, on the case of the Leper in the 14th chapter of Leviticus, the same writer remarks, that the sin-offering was enjoined, “because that the whole of the Mosaic religion being founded on this principle, that whatever befalls any human creature is the result of providential appointment, the leper must consider his malady, as a judicial infliction for some transgression.” And this principle is so far extended by Maimonides, (Moreh Nevochim, p. 380) as to pronounce, that “even a pain so slight as that of a thorn wounding the hand and instantly extracted, must be ranked as a penal infliction by the Deity for some offence:” see also Clavering Annot. in Maim. De Pœnitentia, pp. 141, 142. Other Jewish writers carry this matter farther. Thus R. Bechai, on Levit. xii. 7, says, that “the woman after childbirth is bound to bring a sin-offering, in expiation of that original taint, derived from the common mother of mankind, by whose transgression it was caused, that the procreation of the species was not like the production of the fruits of the earth, spontaneous and unmixed with sensual feelings."

* Maimonides gives the same account of this matter—see Maim. de Sacrif. De Veil. p. 116. also Moreh Nevochim, pp. 464, 465.

Whether these opinions of the Jewish Rabbis be absurd or otherwise, is a point with which I have no concern. The fact, that such were their opinions, is all I contend for. And this I think will satisfy us respecting the competency of Dr. Priestley, as an interpreter of their writings: when we find him thus arguing from the actual impossibility that they could hold an opinion, which they themselves expressly assert they did hold; and maintaining the rectitude of his theory by their testimony, whilst he explains their testimony by the unquestionable rectitude of his theory. This is a species of Logic, and a mode of supplying authorities from antient writers, in which Dr. Priestley has been long exercised, as may abundantly appear, not only from several parts of these illustrations, but from the collection of very able and useful Tracts published by the late Bishop Horsley.

A few words more concerning the Rabbis.—Dr. Priestley endeavours to insinuate, as we have seen p. 266, that "Abarbanel considers sin-offerings as fines or mulcts, by way of admonition not to offend again." Now whoever will take the trouble of consulting that writer himself, will find, that this subordinate end of sacrifice is mentioned by him, only in connection with offences of the slightest kind, and amounting at the most to the want of a sufficient caution in guarding against the possibility of accidental defilement. When this want of caution has been on occasions, and in stations so important, as to render it a high crime and capital offence, as in the case of the High Priest, the expression used is, that the offender deserves to be mulcted with death, but that the victim is accepted in his stead, &c. (De Veil Abarb. Exord. pp. 313. 315.) Whether then the sin-offering was intended to be considered by this writer merely as a fine, the reader will judge. Indeed Dr. Priestley himself has already proved that it was not; inasmuch as he has asserted, that he has represented sacrifices for sin, as emblematical actions. Now if they were solely emblematical actions, they could not have been fines: and if they were solely fines, they could not have been emblematical actions. But if the author, whilst he represented them as fines, considered them likewise as emblematical actions, then the circumstance of his having viewed them in the light of fines, is no proof that he might not likewise have considered them as strictly propitiatory. The introduction therefore of this remark by Dr. Priestley, is either superfluous or sophistical.

The observations applied to Abarbanel, extend with equal force to the opinions of Maimonides: for the former expressly asserts more than once, (Exord. Comment. in Levit. pp. 231. 235.) that he but repeats the sentiments of the latter, on the import of the sacrificial rites. Nor will the assertion of Maimonides, (which has been much relied on by Sykes,) viz. that “repentance expiates all transgressions,” invalidate in any degree what has been here urged; for it is evident, that in the treatise on repentance, in which this position is found, he is speaking in reference to the Jewish institutions, and endeavouring to prove, from the peculiar condition of the Jews since the destruction of their temple, that repentance is the only remaining expedient for restoration to the divine favour: “since we have no longer a temple or altar, there remains no expiation for sins, but repentance only—and this will expiate all transgressions.” (Maim. De Pœnit. Clavering, p. 45.) And with a view to the proving its sufficiency, now that sacrifice was no longer possible, and to prevent the Jews, who had been used to attribute to the sacrifice the principal efficacy in their reconciliation with God, from thinking lightly of that only species of homage and obedience which now remained, it seems to be, that both here, and in his Moreh Nevochim, p. 435. he endeavours to represent prayer and confession of sins, as at all times constituting a main part of the sacrificial service.

But this by no means proves, that the sacrifice was not in his opinion expiatory, on the contrary it clearly manifests his belief that it was; since it is only, because it was no longer possible for the Jews according to the Mosaic ordinances, that he considers it as laid aside; for if repentance and prayer were in themselves perfectly sufficient, then the reason assigned for the cessation of sacrifice, and the efficacy of repentance per se under the existing circumstances, would have been unmeaning.

But this writer's notion of the efficacy of repentance and of the ceremonial rites, may be still better understood from the following remarks. Speaking of the Scape Goat, he says (Moreh Nevochim, p. 494.) that "it was believed to pollute those that touched it, on account of the multitude of sins which it carried:" and of this goat he says again, (De Pœnit. pp. 44, 45.) that "it expiated all the sins recounted in the Law; of whatever kind, with regard to him who had repented of those sins; but that with respect to him who had not repented, it expiated only those of a lighter sort:" and those sins of a lighter sort, he defines to be all those transgressions of the Law, against which excision is not denounced. So that, according to this writer, there were cases, and those not a few, in which repentance was not necessary to expiation. And again, that it was not in itself sufficient for expiation, he clearly admits, not only from his general notion of sacrifices throughout his works, but from his express declarations on this subject. He says, that with respect to certain offences, “neither repentance, nor the day of expiation,” (which he places on the same ground with repentance as to its expiatory virtue) “have their expiatory effect, unless chastisement be inflicted to perfect the expiation.” And in one case, he adds, that “neither repentance followed by uniform obedience, nor the day of expiation, nor the chastisement inflicted, can effect the expiation, nor can the expiation be completed but by the death of the offender.” (De Pœnit. pp. 46, 47.)

The reader may now be able to form a judgment, whether the doctrines of the Jewish Rabbis really support Dr. Priestley's position, that amongst the modern Jews no notion of any scheme of sacrificial atonement, or of any requisite for forgiveness save repentance and reformation, has been found to have had existence. And I must again remind him of the way, in which the authorities of the Jewish writers have been managed by Dr. Priestley, so as to draw from them a testimony apparently in his favour. The whole tribe of Rabbinical authors, who have, as we have seen, in the most explicit terms avowed the doctrine of atonement, in the strictest sense of the word, are passed over without a mention, save only Nachmanides, who is but transiently named, whilst his declarations on this subject, being directly adverse, are totally suppressed. Maimonides, and Abarbanel indeed, are adduced in evidence: but how little to Dr. Priestley's purpose, and in how mutilated and partial a shape, I have endeavoured to evince. These writers standing in the foremost rank of the Rabbinical teachers, as learned and liberal expositors of the Jewish law, could not but feel the utility of the sacrificial system, unexplained by that great sacrifice, which, as Jews, they must necessarily have rejected. Hence arises their theory of the human origin of sacrifice; and hence their occasional seeming departure from the principles of the sacrificial worship, maintained by other Rabbis, and adopted also by themselves, in the general course of their writings. From these parts of their works, which seem to be no more than philosophical struggles, to colour to the eye of reason the inconsistencies of an existing doctrine, has Dr. Priestley sought support for an assertion, which is in open contradiction, not only to the testimony of every other Rabbinical writer, but to the express language of these very writers themselves.

But Dr. Priestley is not contented with forcing upon these more remote authors a language, which they never used, but he endeavours to extract from those of later date, a testimony to the same purpose, in direct opposition to their own explicit assertions. Thus, in Buxtorf's account of the ceremony observed by the modern Jews, of killing a cock, on the preparation for the day of expiation, he thinks he finds additional support for his position, that amongst the modern Jews, no idea of a strict propitiatory atonement has been known to exist. Now, as to Dr. Priestley's representation of Buxtorf I cannot oppose a more satisfactory authority than that of Buxtorf himself, I shall quote the passage as given in that writer; and that no pretence of misrepresentation may remain, I give it untinged by the medium of a translation.

“ Quilibet postea paterfamilias, cum gallo præ manibus, in medium primus prodit, et ex Psalmis Davidis ait; Sedentes in tenebris, &c.— item, Si ei adsit Angelus interpres, unus de mille, qui illi resipiscentiam exponat, tunc miserabitur ejus, et dicet, REDIME EUM, NE DESCENDAT IN FOSSAM: INVENI ENIM EXPIATIONEM (gallum nempe gallinaceum, qui peccata mea expiabit.) Deinde expiationem aggreditur, et capiti suo gallum ter allidit, singulosque ictus his vocibus prosequitur, זה חליפתי זה תחתי זה כפרתי זה התרנגול ילך למיתה ואני אלך לחיים טובים עם כל ישראל אמן — Hic Gallus sit PERMUTATIO PRO ME, hic IN LOCUM MEUM SUCCEDAT, hic sit EXPIATIO PRO ME, huic gallo mors offeretur, mihi vero et toti Israeli vita fortunata. Amen. Hoc ille ter

ex ordine facit, pro se, sc. pro filiis suis, et pro peregrinis qui apud illum sunt, uti Summus Sacerdos in vet. test. expiationem quoque fecit. Gallo deinde imponens manus, ut in sacrificiis olim, eum statim mactat, cutemque ad collum ei primum contrahit et constringit, et secum reputat, se, qui præfocetur aut stranguletur, dignum esse: hunc autem gallum IN SUUM LOCUM SUBSTITUERE et offerre; cultello postea jugulum resolvit, iterum animo secum perpendens, semetipsum, qui gladio plectatur, dignum esse; et confestim illum vi e manibus in terram projicit, ut denotet, se dignum esse, qui lapidibus obruatur: postremo illum assat, ut hoc facto designet, se dignum esse, qui igne vitam finiat: et ita quatuor hæc mortis genera, pro Judæis gallus sustinere debet. Intestina vulgo supra domus tectum jaciunt. Alii dicunt id fieri, quia quum peccata internum quid potius quam externum sint, ideo galli intestinis peccata hæerere: corvos itaque advenire, et cum Judæorum peccatis in desertum avolare debere, ut hircus in vet. test. cum populi peccatis in desertum aufugiebat. Alii aliam reddunt causam. Causa autem, cur gallo potius quam alio animante utantur, hæc est, quia vir ebraice גבר Gebher appellatur. Jam si Gebher peccaverit, Gebher etiam peccati PŒNAM SUSTINERE debet—Quia vero gravior esset pœna, quàm ut illam subire possent Judæi, gallum gallinaceum qui Talmudicâ seu Babyioniâ dialecto גבר Geb- ker appellatur, in locum suum substituunt, et ita justitiæ Dei satisfit; quia quum גֶּבְהֵר Gebher peccaverit, גֶּבְהֵר Gebher etiam, i. e. Gallus gallinaceus plectitur.”—Synagoga Judaica, ed. 4. p. 509—512.

I leave this extract, without comment, to confront Dr. Priestley’s representation of it; viz. that it indicates nothing of the strict notion of atonement. (Theol. Rep. vol: i. pp. 410, 411.) He adds indeed, for the purpose of confirming his account of this passage, that this cock is afterwards eaten, as if thence to infer, that the offerers could not consider the animal as a real substitute for them, in respect to their sins and their punishment; and yet Buxtorf expressly asserts, that when it had been the custom to distribute amongst the poor the animals slain in the manner above described, it created much murmuring; the poor recoiling with horror from the gift, saying that they were required to eat the sins of the rich: and that the rich offerers were therefore obliged to bestow their charitable donations on the poor in money, to the amount of the value of their offering; and “thus having redeemed the offering from God, by its equivalent in money, they then feasted upon it.” (Syn. Jud. pp. 515, 516.) Again, Dr. Priestley insinuates, that the Jews could not consider this offering as a strict expiation, because that “when they themselves die, they pray that their own deaths may be considered as an expiation or satisfaction for their sins.”—Dr. Priestley does not recollect, that the atonement made at the day of expiation, extended only to the sins of the past year; and that those which were committed after that day, must remain unexpiated until the day of expiation in the succeeding year. The dying person had consequently to account for all the sins committed since the last preceding day of expiation. And as every natural ill was deemed by the Jews a penal infliction for sin, death was consequently viewed by them in the same light, and in the highest degree; and therefore it was reasonable, that they should hope from it a full atonement, and satisfaction for their transgressions.

Thus we see, that even the authorities quoted by Dr. Priestley, as supporting his theories, are found to be in direct contradiction to them. And from this, and the numerous other instances, of his misrepresentation of antient writers, which may be found in the course of these remarks, we may learn a useful lesson, respecting his reports of authors, in those voluminous writings, in which he has laboured to convert the religion of Christ into a system of Heathen morality. I have, for this purpose, been thus copious on his representations of the opinions of the modern Jews; and without dwelling longer on this point, or adverting to Isaac Netto, who happened in a “very good Sermon" to speak with confidence of the mercy of God, without hinting any thing of mediation as necessary to satisfy his justice, (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 411.) I turn back to what we are told three pages before, concerning Philo and Josephus.

These writers, who were nearly cotemporary with our Saviour, Dr. Priestley informs us, furnish no intimation whatever, in any part of their works, of "any ideas that have the least connection with those that are suggested by the modern doctrine of atonement:" (pp. 408, 409.) and according to his usual practice, he produces one or two insulated passages from the voluminous works of these authors, to prove that their sentiments on the subjects of sacrifice, and of the divine placability, correspond with his own. Now were it true, with respect to Josephus, as Dr. Priestley asserts, that he suggests no idea in any degree similar to the received notion of atonement, yet could this furnish no proof, that he entertained no such idea, because he himself expressly informs us, (Ant. Jud. lib. iii. cap. 9. sect. 3. p. 121. & cap. 11. sect. 2. p. 125—vol. i. ed. Huds.) that he reserves the more minute examination of the nature of the animal offerings, for a distinct treatise on the subject of sacrifice, which has either not been written, or has not come down to us. But although the historian, in consequence of this intention, has made but slight and incidental mention of the nature of sacrifice ; yet has he said enough to disprove Dr. Priestley's assertion, having, in all places in which he has occasion to speak of the sin-offering, described the victim as sacrificed in deprecation of God's wrath, and in supplication of pardon for transgression. Παραιτησις αμαρτηματων is the expression he constantly employs on this subject* : and in treating of the scape goat, he calls it αποτροπιασμος και παραιτησις υπερ αμαρτηματων. (See p. 92, as referred to in the note below.) And as to the distinction made by this writer, between the sacrifices of Cain and Abel, on the strength of which Dr. Priestley ranks him as an auxiliary on the subject of the sacrificial import, it deserves to be remarked, that this, as far as it can be understood, seems not to be in any degree inconsistent with the commonly received notions of sacrifice, inasmuch as it relates rather to the sentiments of the offerers, than to the intrinsic nature of the things offered. †

But besides, we find in the very section, in which this distinction is pointed out, an observation respecting a sacrifice offered by Cain, which, had Dr. Priestley permitted his eyes to wander but a few lines from the passage he has quoted, might have convinced him, that Josephus admitted, equally with the supporters of the present doctrine of atonement, the propitiatory virtue of sacrifice: for, having related the murder of Abel by his brother, and God's consequent resentment against Cain, he adds, that upon Cain's "offering up a sacrifice, and by virtue thereof, (δι' αὐτης) supplicating him not to be extreme in his wrath, God was led to remit the punishment of the murder." Thus the wrath of God was averted by sacrifice; and that life, which, according to strict justice, was to be paid for the life which had been taken away, was preserved through virtue of the offering made. With what reason then, upon the whole, Dr. Priestley has claimed the support of Josephus's testimony, it is not difficult to judge. Whether he has had better grounds for appealing to that of Philo, remains to be considered.

* Χιμαρρον τε επι παραιτησει αμαρτηματων—Again, εριφον υπερ αμαρταδων—and, κατα παραιτησιν αμαρτιων εριφου.—See Joseph's Opera. Ant. Jud. lib. iii. pp. 90. 92. Edit. Genev. 1633.

† See the translation by L'Estrange, p. 5. who appears to have hit on the true meaning of the original ; and compare the preceding sentences, in which the characters of the two brothers are described.

This distinguished and philosophic Jew, whose resemblance to Plato, both in richness of diction and sublimity of sentiment, gave birth to the Greek proverb, η Πλατων φιλωνιζει, η Φιλων πλατωνιζει, has indeed exercised upon the Jewish doctrines an extraordinary degree of mystical refinement: he is also pronounced, by some of the highest authorities, to have been entirely ignorant both of the language and customs of the Jews; and consequently to have fallen into gross errors, in his representation of the doctrines of their religion.* And yet from two detached passages in this author's writings, one of which is so completely irrelevant, that it were idle even to notice it, Dr. Priestley does not hesitate to decide upon the notion entertained by the Jews of his day, respecting the nature of sacrificial atonement. He also asserts indeed, that in no part of his works, does he suggest any idea, in the slightest degree resembling the modern notion of atonement. To hazard this assertion, is to confess an entire ignorance of the writings of this author: for on the contrary, so congenial are his sentiments and language, to those of the first Christian writers, on the subject of the corruption of man's nature, the natural insufficiency of our best works, the necessity of an intercessor, a redeemer, and ransom for sin, together with the appointment of the divine ΛΟΓΟΣ, for these purposes, that the learned Bryant has been led to conclude, that he must actually have derived these doctrines from the sources of Evangelical knowledge. That he had indeed the opportunity of doing so, from an intimate intercourse with St. Peter, is attested by Hieronymus, (Catalog. Scriptor. Eccles.) Pho-

* See Photius Biblioth. cv. ed. 1635.—Thes. Temp. Jos. Scalig. Animad. p. 7. ed: 1658—and Grotius, in Mat. xxxvi. 18

tius, (Biblioth. cv.) and Suidas, (Historic.) by whom, as well as by Eusebius, (Hist. Eccles. lib. ii.) it is affirmed, that the beautiful eulogium contained in this writer's treatise, Περὶ Βίβ. Θεωρ. was pronounced on the Apostolic Christians settled at Alexandria, who were the followers of St. Mark, the disciple of Peter. The arguments of Dr. Allix, however, in his Judgment of the Jewish Church, &c. (p. 76—83.) though they may justly be deemed invalid, as to the impossibility of Philo's intercourse with the first Christians, for which he contends in opposition to the above authorities, yet seem sufficient to warrant us in pronouncing, that however similar his notions and expressions may be to those of the early Christians, they yet were not derived from Christian sources: and that consequently, they exhibit the doctrines of the Jewish church, such at least as they were held by the Jews of Alexandria in his day.

But to instance a few of the numerous passages in the works of this author, of the import above alluded to.—He informs us, (Περὶ Φυτῶν. p. 217. ed. 1640.) that “man was made in the image of God”—that he was placed in a state of perfect happiness (ibid. pp. 219, 220. & Νομ. Ιερ. Αλληγ. pp. 56, 57.)—but that, “having disgraced and deformed this likeness, by his fall from virtue, he likewise fell from happiness; and from an immortal state, was deservedly doomed to misery and death," (Περί Ευγεν. p. 906.)—that being now "naturally prone to vice," (Θει. Πραγ. Κληρ. p. 522.) and so degenerate, "that even his virtues are of no value, but through the goodness and favour of God," (Περί τῆς το Χειρ. p. 166.)—mankind are, consequently, obliged "to trust to this alone for the purification of the soul; and not imagine, that they are of themselves capable, without the divine favour and influence, to purge and wash away the stains, which deform their nature." (Περί τῶν Ονειρ. pp. 1111, 1112.) And so great does he represent this corruption of the human mind, as to exclaim, that "no man of sound judgment, observing the actions of men, can refrain from calling aloud on the only Saviour God, to remove this burden of iniquity, and by appointing some ransom, and redemption for the soul, (λυτρα και σωσρα καταθεις της ψυχης,) to restore it to its original liberty." (Περί Συγχ. Διαλ. p. 333.) "For a race, by nature thus carried headlong to sin," he pronounces "some mode of propitiation to be necessary," (Περί Φυγαδ. p. 465.)—and for this purpose, he says, "an advocate and intercessor for men" (ΙΚετης τῆς θνητῆς) has been appointed, viz. "the Divine Logos, that Archangel, the first born son of God, ordained by him to stand as a mediator (Μεθοριος) between the creature and the Creator, acting as a surety to each party, (αμφοτεροισ ομηρευων) and proclaiming peace to all the world, that through his intercession men might have a firm faith in God:" (Θει. Πραγ. Κληρ. p. 509.)—that same Λογος, who is also called by him "an High Priest, free from all sin;" (Περι Φυγαδ. p. 466. and Περι των Ονειρ. p. 597.) of whose mediation he acknowledges the intercession of Aaron to have been but a type; (Περι Φυγαδ. p. 466. and Θει. Πραγ. Κληρ. p. 508.) and whom he describes to be that "substitute and representation" of the Deity, (υπαρχος Θεε) through whom, he is related in the Old Testament to have conversed with man. (Περι των Ονειρ. p. 600.)—And when he speaks of that part of the Law, wherein it is said, that the man of guilt should fly to an appointed city of refuge, and not be acquitted, till the death of the High Priest, he confesses (Περι Φυγαδ. pp. 465, 466.) that by this the Levitical High Priest cannot be literally meant, but that he must be in this case the type of one far greater: for "that the High Priest alluded to, is not a man, but the sacred Logos, who is incapable of all sin, and who is said to have his head anointed with oil:" and that the death of this High Priest is that, which is here intended:—thus admitting the death of the Logos, whom he describes as the anointed, and allows to be typified by the Jewish High Priest, to be the means of recovery from a state of spiritual bondage, and of giving liberty to the soul. It is true, he allegorizes away this meaning again, according to his usual custom. But whilst he refines upon the doctrine, he at the same time testifies its existence in his day.

The reader will now judge, whether this writer deemed “repentance and good works sufficient for divine acceptance,” or whether he entertained “any ideas, resembling those that are suggested by the modern doctrine of atonement.” Dr. Priestley however contends, that he considered sacrifices but as gifts, and this he infers from the account given by him, of the preference of Abel’s sacrifice to that of Cain: viz. that “instead of inanimate things, he offered animate; instead of young animals, those that were grown to their full size; instead of the leanest, the fattest,” &c.—Dr. Priestley should at the same time have stated, that the whole of the account given by this writer of the history of Cain and Abel, is one continued allegory: that by the birth of the two brothers, he understands “the rise of two opposite principles in the soul; one, ascribing all to the natural powers of the individual, and thence represented by Cain, which signifies possession; the other referring all to God, and thence denominated Abel” (Περί ων Ιερουσαλ. p. 130): that this latter principle he also holds to be implied in the occupation of Abel, inasmuch “as by a tender of sheep, is meant a controller of the brute powers of the soul; and that Abel therefore, from his pious reference of all to God, is properly described as a Shepherd; and Cain, on the contrary, from the deriving all from his own individual exertions, is called a tiller of the ground." (Ibid. pp. 136, 137.) The sacrifice of Abel consequently denotes the offering of the pious and devout affections of the heart, this being "what is meant by the firstlings of the flock, and the fat thereof," (ibid. pp. 137. 145. 154.) whilst that of Cain, on the other hand, represents an offering, destitute of those affections, an offering of impiety, inasmuch "as the fruits of the earth import the selfish feelings; their being offered after certain days, indicates the backwardness of the offerer; and the fruits, simply, and not the first-fruits, shew that the first honour was held back from the Creator, and given to the creature." (Ibid. pp. 137. 141, 142. 145.) And in this sense it is, that Abel is said by this writer, "neither to have offered the same things, nor in the same way; but instead of inanimate, things animate; instead of young and inferior animals, the matured and choicest:" in other words, that the most animated and vigorous sentiments of homage, are requisite to constitute an acceptable act of devotion.

In this light, the due value of Dr. Priestley's quotation from this writer, as applied to the present question, may easily be estimated. But had Dr. Priestley looked to that part of this author's works, in which he treats expressly of the animals offered in sacrifice, he would have seen, that he describes the sacrifice for sin, as being the appointed means of “obtaining pardon, and escaping the evil consequences of sin,”—κακων απαλλαγη—κακων φυγη—αμνησιαν αδικηματων αιτεισθαι: (Περι Ζων. pp. 838. 843.); and that in the case of an injury committed, he represents the reparation made to the person injured, joined to contrition for the offence and supplication of pardon from the Deity, as not sufficient to obtain the divine forgiveness, without offering an animal in expiation. (Ibid. p. 844.)—Had Dr. Priestley indeed asserted, that this writer’s notion of sacrifice, was that of a symbolical and mystical representation, he had given a fair account of the matter. For, when he informs us, that “the blood of the victim was poured in a circle round the altar, because a circle is the most perfect figure; and that the soul which is figured by the blood should through the entire circle of thought and action worship God:” when he tells us that “the victim was separated into parts, to admonish us, that in order to the true worship of the deity, his nature must be considered and weighed in its distinct parts and separate perfections;” (ibid. p. 839.) it will readily be admitted, that he soars into regions, whither a plain understanding will not find it easy to follow him. But to have stated this, would not have answered the purpose of Dr. Priestley’s argument: because this high strain of mysticism would have clearly disqualified him, as an evidence on behalf of Dr. Priestley's, or of any intelligible, theory of sacrifice.

Indeed with respect to this ancient writer, the truth seems to be,* that viewing the Jewish system without that light, which alone could give it shape and meaning, he found it impossible to account for it on any sound principles of reason. He therefore made his religion bend to his philosophy, and veiled in allegory whatever would not admit a satisfactory literal solution. And this he must have found still more necessary, if what is related concerning his intercourse with the early Christians be well founded. For in his controversies with them, the sacrificial system, which they would not fail to press upon him as requiring and receiving a full completion in the sacrifice of Christ, he would have found himself compelled to spiritualize, so as to give it a distinct and independent import.

Now if to these considerations be added, what has been already stated, that this writer had not the means of being perfectly acquainted with the nature of the Hebrew rites, it will follow, that his testimony cannot be expected to bear strongly upon the present question. The same has been already shewn with respect to that of Josephus. So far however as they both do apply to the subject, instead of justifying Dr. Priestley's position, they are found to make directly against it. Their silence on the subject of the vicarious import of animal sacrifice, cannot for the reasons alleged, be urged by Dr. Priestley, as an argument in support of that part of his system, which denies the existence of that notion amongst the Jews: whilst the explicit declarations of Josephus, on the expiatory virtue of sacrifice; and those of Philo, on the necessity of mediation and propitiation to render even our good works acceptable to a God offended at the corruption of our nature, and of some means of ransom and redemption to restore man to his lost estate, sufficiently evince the existence of those great leading principles of the doctrine of atonement, expiation and propitiation, which Dr. Priestley utterly denies to have had any place amongst the Jews, in the days of these two celebrated writers.

* The above observation may supply an answer to many who have objected against the alleged existence of a doctrine of vicarious atonement amongst the early Jews, the silence of Philo upon that head, even when treating expressly upon the choice of victims for sacrifice.—See particularly Scripture Account of Sacrifices, App. p. 17.

The value of Dr. Priestley's assertions concerning these writers, as well as of those respecting Jews of later date, being now sufficiently ascertained, I shall conclude this long discussion with a few remarks on the ideas entertained by the ancient heathens, with regard to the nature, and efficacy, of their sacrifices. To adduce arguments for the purpose of shewing, that they deemed their animal sacrifices, not only of an expiatory, but of a strictly vicarious nature, will to those, who are conversant with the history and writings of the ancients, appear a waste of time. But as Dr. Priestley, in the rage of refutation, has contended even against this position, it may not be useless to cite a few authorities which may throw additional light, if not upon a fact which is too glaring to receive it, at least upon the pretensions to historical and classical information, of the writer who controverts that fact. What has been already urged in Number V. might perhaps be thought abundant upon this head; but as the testimony of Cæsar respecting the Gauls, in p. 126, is the only one, which goes to the precise point of the substitution of the victim to suffer death in place of the transgressor, it may not be amiss to add the testimonies of Herodotus, (lib. ii. cap. 59.) and of Plutarch, (Isid. et Osir. p. 363. tom. ii. ed. 1620.) respecting the Egyptian practice of imprecating on the head of the victim, those evils which the offerers wished to avert from themselves: as also those of Servius, (Æn. 3. 57.) and Suidas, (in voc. περιψημια,) ascribing, the same sacrificial sentiment, the first to the Massilienses, and the second to the Grecian states. Hesychius likewise in substituting for the word περιψημια an expiatory or redeeming sacrifice, the word αντιψυχον, (as has been noticed, p. 126.)

marks with sufficient clearness, that the expiation was made by offering life for life. And, not to dwell upon the well known passage in Plautus, * (Epid. p. 412. ed. 1577.) which clearly defines the expiation as effected by a vicarious suffering; or, upon that in Porphyry, † (De Abstin. lib. iv. p. 396. ed. 1620.) in which it is asserted to have been the general tradition, that animal sacrifices were resorted to in such cases as required life for life, ψυχην ἀντι ψυχῆς; it may be sufficient to state one authority from Ovid, who in the sixth book of his Fasti, particularly describes the sacrificed animal as a vicarious substitute, the several parts of which were given as equivalents, or though not strictly such, yet hoped to be graciously accepted as such, in place of the offerer:

Cor pro corde, precor, pro fibris sumite fibras.

Hanc animam vobis pro meliore damus.

The observations contained in this Number, joined to those in Numbers V. IX. XXII. and XXIII. when contrasted with the position maintained by Dr. Priestley, that in no nation, antient or modern, Jew or Heathen, has any idea of a doctrine of atonement, or of any requi-

* Men' piaculum oportet fieri propter stultitiam tuam, Ut meum tergum stultitiæ tuæ subdas succedaneum?

† Ὑπο δε τινας καιρος πρῶτον ἑρεσον θυσαι μυθευοντας ψυχην ἀντι ψυχῆς αἰτεμενης.

site for forgiveness, save repentance and reformation, ever existed,—may enable the reader to form a just estimate of that writer's competency ; and may perhaps suggest an useful caution in the admission of his assertions.

NO. XXXIV.—ON H. TAYLOR'S OBJECTION OF THE WANT OF A LITERAL CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE MOSAIC SACRIFICE AND THE DEATH OF CHRIST.

PAGE 31. (k)—H. Taylor goes so far, as to use even this argument gravely. (Ben. Mord. p. 811—814.)

Indeed the bold liberties which this writer has been urged to take with the language of Scripture, and the trifling distinctions to which he has been driven for the purpose of divesting the death of Christ of the characters of the sin-offering prescribed by the law, render it desirable that his whole argument upon this particular point should be laid before the reader. When ingenuity, like that of this author, is forced into such straits, the inference is instructive.

“ It is true” (he says) “ that the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews labours to shew a similarity between the Mosaic and the Christian sacrifices : which no doubt there was ; and to make out the analogy, uses very hard figures : as when he compares the sprinkling the blood of the victim, to the sprinkling our hearts from an evil conscience ; and the tabernacle to the body of Christ ; and the flesh of Christ to the veil which opened the way into the Sanctum Sanctorum : and calls it a new and a living way ; and considers Christ both as the High-Priest and Victim. But were the analogy ever so exact, it would not make the expressions literal : and in many particulars there is no manner of likeness between them. For in the sacrifice of Christ there was no salting with salt, no imposition of hands, no blood sprinkled by the Priest, in which consisted the atonement ; for the atonement was not made by the death of the victim, but by the sprinkling of the blood ; since the offender did not offer him to God, nor begged forgiveness of his sins : all which things were customary, and most if not all of them necessary, in a Mosaic expiatory sacrifice of a victim. But this was not the case with Christ. He was crucified and slain, as a common malefactor."

" If it be said, that Christ was the sacrificer, and he offered himself up to God ; it should be considered, that the sacrifices of the Mosaic law were offered to gain forgiveness to the person who sacrificed ; but this could not be true of Christ, for he had no sin to be forgiven."

" If it be said, that he sacrificed as a Priest, to gain forgiveness for others; it should be observed, that, according to the Mosaic law, he was incapable of such an office: for the law requires, that the priests should be of the tribe of Levi, or the family of Aaron. But he (Christ) of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning the priest-hood. (Hebr. vii. 13, 14.)

And therefore St. Paul, who was aware of this objection, when he speaks of Christ as a Priest, tells us, that he was a priest of a superior order to the Aaronical priesthood, being a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedek. (ver. 17.) This is a plain concession, that according to the Mosaic law, Christ was incapable as a priest to offer any sacrifice. But supposing he had been of the tribe of Levi, the case would have been just the same with regard to all mankind, except the Jews: for the Jewish sacrifices did not extend beyond the circumcision. The sacrifice of Christ could not therefore be a propitiatory sacrifice, according to the Mosaic law; and much less a propitiation for the sins of the whole world."

"If it was therefore a literal offering or sacrifice made by Christ as a PRIEST, it was of a higher nature, and of a prior and superior dispensation to the Mosaic; such as was offered in the days of Melchisedek, the Priest of the most high God. But we have no reason to think that any offerings before the law were meant to be expiatory, but all of them eucharistical.”

Thus, after labouring to prove that St. Paul was extravagant in his comparison of the Christian and Mosaic sacrifices; and that all his hard figures had not enabled him to make out a resemblance between them: and labouring to prove this by shewing that Christ was neither, literally, a Mosaic victim nor a Mosaic priest (a point which no person was ever mad enough to contend for)—thus, I say, after all this, our author in his concluding paragraph admits the whole nature and force of the Christian sacrifice, and the true distinction which points out the reason why it should not conform in every minute ceremonial with the formalities of the Mosaic; namely, that it was of a higher nature, and of a prior and superior dispensation. For as to the accompanying observation intended to do away the effect of this admission; viz. that there is no reason to think, that any offerings before the law were meant to be expiatory; this is a mere gratis dictum, the contradiction of which it is hoped is satisfactorily made out in other parts of this work. And thus it appears, upon the whole, that on a single gratuitous assumption, the author rests the entire weight of the preceding argument; and on its strength he has presumed to set up his own doctrines in opposition to those of St. Paul.

Whether then in the present instance, this author, ingenious and learned as he undoubtedly is, deserves more to be condemned for his trifling as a reasoner, or for his presumption as a critic, it is not an easy matter to decide.

NO. XXXV.—ON THE ARGUMENTS BY WHICH IT IS ATTEMPTED TO PROVE THE PASSOVER NOT TO BE A SACRIFICE.

PAGE 31. (1)—It is a curious fact, that the declaration of St. Paul, (1 Cor. v. 7.) that Christ our Passover is SACRIFICED for us, is adduced by Dr. Priestley, (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 215.) as a convincing proof that Christ was not sacrificed at all. It follows, he says, “from the allusion to the Paschal lamb,” contained in this passage and others of the New Testament “that the death of Christ is called a sacrifice, only by way of figure, because these two” (namely, sacrifice, and the paschal lamb) “are quite different and inconsistent ideas:” and the argument by which he endeavours to establish this, is not less extraordinary than the position itself, as it brings forward an instance, in which one of these totally different and inconsistent ideas is expressly called in the Old Testament by the name of the other: the Passover being, in the passage which he quotes from Exod. xii. 27. directly termed the Sacrifice of the Lord's Passover.—This seems an odd species of logic. Dr. Priestley however hopes to mend the argument by asserting, that “this is the only place in the Old Testament, in which the Paschal lamb is termed a sacrifice:” and that here, “it could be so called, only in some secondary and partial, and not in the proper and primary sense of the word:” and for these reasons—namely, that “there was no priest employed upon the occasion; no altar made use of; no burning; nor any part offered to the Lord: all which circumstances (he adds) were essential to every proper sacrifice.”—Now in answer to these several assertions, I am obliged to state the direct contradiction of each: for 1st, the passage in Exodus xii. 27. is not the only one, in which the Paschal lamb is termed קָרְבַּן, a sacrifice; it being expressly so called, in no less than four passages in Deuteronomy, (xvi. 2. 4, 5, 6.) and also in Exodus, xxxiv. 25, and in its parallel passage. xxiii. 18.—2. A Priest was employed.—3. An altar was made use of.—4. There was a burning, and a part offered to the Lord: the inwards being burnt upon the altar, and the blood poured out at the foot thereof.—Dr. Priestley adds, for the completion of his proof, that “the paschal lamb is very far from having been ever called a sin-offering, or said to be killed on the account of sin.” But neither is the burnt-offering “ever called a sin- offering ;” nor is the animal slain in any of the various kinds of peace offering, whether in the votive, the free-will, or the sacrifice of thanksgiving, ever “ said to be killed on account of sin.” In other words, one species of sacrifice is not the same with, nor to be called by the name of another.—I agree with Dr. Priestley in this position ; and shall not dispute with him any conclusion he may draw from so productive a premiss.

But so evident is it, that the Passover was truly a sacrifice, that even Sykes himself, (whose work on Redemption has been the great armory, whence Dr. Priestley and the other combatants of that doctrine have derived their principal weapons of attack,) found it impossible to deny the position. He accordingly fully admits the point. (Essay on Sacrifices, p. 41.) And indeed whoever considers what are the essential characters of a sacrifice, can have little difficulty upon this head, as the Passover will be found to possess them all.

1. It was a Corban, or offering brought to the Tabernacle or Temple, as we find it expressly enjoined in Deut. xvi. 2, 5, 6. and exemplified at the solemn passover in the reign of Josiah, 2 Chron. xxxv. 5, 6, 10, 11. That the tabernacle, or temple, is intended by the expressions used in the passage of Deuteronomy above referred to, and not Jerusalem at large, is evident from this, that the very same expressions are employed, when speaking of all the sacrifices and offerings, in Deut. xii. 5, 6. 11. 14. where it is manifest, that the temple, the peculiar habitation of God is necessarily meant. This still farther appears from 1 Kings, viii. 29. and 2 Chron. vii. 16. Moreover, we find the Passover expressly called a Corban (Numb. ix. 6, 7. 13): and it is certain that nothing was so called, but what was brought and offered up to God at the tabernacle or temple—see Cudw. Int. Syst. Discourse, &c. p. 13. We may also add that it is actually specified by Maimonides, as the reason why the Jews of later times cannot kill the Paschal lamb, that they have no temple to offer it in*—see Ainsw. on Exod. xii. 8.—2. The blood of the paschal lamb was poured out, sprinkled, and offered at the altar by the Priests, in like manner as the blood of the victims usually slain in sacrifice, as appears from

* Bishop Patrick in a note on Exod. xii. 21, makes the following observation—“Here it may be fit to note, that the lamb being first killed in Egypt, it was killed in every man’s house, for they had no altar there, nor any other place where they had liberty to kill it. But after they came to the land of Canaan, it was not lawful to sacrifice it any where, but in the place which God appointed for his worship, Deut. xvi. 2. From which Maimonides concludes, that whatsoever they did with other sacrifices, yet this could not be offered in the high places, but only at the temple. And it is likely they did so in the wilderness, the tabernacle being newly erected at the keeping of the second passover, Numb. ix. 5.”

Exod. xxiii. 18. and xxxiv. 25.—2 Chron. xxx. 15, 16. and xxxv. 11. And in this sprinkling of the blood consisted, as we are told by the Jewish doctors, the very essence of a sacrifice—see Cudw. ut supra, p. 10.—3. The fat and entrails were burnt upon the altar, as may be collected from the accounts given of the ceremony of the Passover in the passages already referred to; as also from the declarations of the Jewish doctors, the descriptions of the paschal sacrifice in the Misna of the Talmud, and the testimony of the Karaites, who are known to reject all the Talmudical traditions not founded on Scripture.* Thus then, all the distinguishing characters of a sacrifice,†

* See Cudw. Int. Syst. Disc. &c. pp. 12, 14, 15, 16.—see also Beausobre's Introd. pp. 134, 135. ed. 1790—and Sykes's Essay on Sacrifices, p. 41.

† “Pascha nimirum erat sacrificium proprie dictum, Exod. xxiii. 18. xxxiv. 25. Hinc Pascha θυσιας dicitur, Marc. xiv. 22. Sed præcipuum est, quod sanguis agni a sacerdote spargebatur, 2 Par. xxx. 16. xxxv. 11. in quo radix, seu essentia, sacrificii est, inquit canon Judæorum notissimus. Adde quod in Egypto ubi nullum erat altare ad quod spargeretur sanguis, huic tamen analogum fuit, quod postes illinebant sanguine agni. Deinde Pascha in loco sacro mañtari oportuit, Deut. xvi. 5.”—Poli Syn. in Exod. xii. 27.—In like manner Bishop Patrick expresses himself on the subject of the Passover. “It is” (he observes) “frequently called by the name of a sacrifice, Exod. xxiii. 18. xxxiv. 25. Deut. xvi. 4, 5, 6.—And it is called a Corban; which is a name given only to those things which were brought to be offered up to God. See Numb. ix. 13. where, we find to belong to the offering of the Paschal lamb. It was brought to the temple, as a Corban, or sacred offering to the Lord. It was slain in the courts of the temple; and the blood was received by the priests, and handed to the High Priest; who pouring it forth, and sprinkling it before the altar, offered it together with the fat and entrails, which were burnt upon the altar.

One circumstance indeed has been urged, which wears the appearance of an objection; namely, that the Paschal lamb was slain not by the priest, but by the person who brought it to the temple. Philo, in his Life of Moses, (p. 686) has stated this, as distinguishing the Passover from all other sacrifices (which, by the way, clearly implies that he considers that to be a sacrifice as well as the rest; and so indeed he expressly calls it, Πανδημος ΘΥΣΙΑ--De Sept. & Fest. p. 1190.) In this, however, as in many other particulars of the Jewish rites, Philo is manifestly mistaken, this being by no means peculiar to the Passover: for that, in every kind of sacrifice, the individual that offered it might kill the sacrifice, is evident from the instance of the burnt-offering, in Levit. i. 4, as it is called Corban, so the same word is used for bringing it, which is commonly used about other sacrifices. And it further appears to have been properly a sacrifice, by the rites belonging to it: for the blood of it was sprinkled by the priests, 2 Chron. xxx. 16. xxxv. 11." — Patr. on Exod xii. 27.

5 ; from that of the peace-offering, iii. 2 ; and from that of the sin-offering, iv. 24 : the proper duty of the priests being only to sprinkle the blood, and to place upon the altar whatever was to be offered.*—It must certainly be admitted, that the ceremony of laying hands upon the head of the victim, which was usual in other sacrifices, was not adopted in that of the passover. This distinction, however, at the same time that it is noticed by Sykes, (Essay, &c. p. 41.) is sufficiently accounted for by that writer, inasmuch as “ the paschal lamb was the sacrifice of a company : and where a company are concerned, no one can act for the whole, unless there be a proper representative ; as the elders of a congregation are for the congregation, or persons deputed are for those who depute them, or governors may be for their people.”

If farther confirmation can be yet wanted to shew that the Passover was truly a sacrifice, we are supplied with this by the express testimony of Josephus ; who in the third book of his Antiquities, treating of the subject of sacrifices, calls it the sacrifice which the Israelites had been ordered to sacrifice when leaving the land of Egypt—την ΘΥΣΙΑΝ ην τότε εξηιουτως Αιγυπτου ΘΥΣΑΙ προειπου

* See Levit. i. 4—9. iii. 2—5. iv. 24—26.—see also the Jewish doctors, as quoted by Cudworth, Discourse, &c. pp. 11, 12, and Jennings Jew. Antiq. vol. ii. p. 191.

ημας, ΠΑΣΧΑ λεγομενην.*—The authority of Josephus, himself a priest, and one of the most intelligent of his nation, will hardly be disputed as to what was considered by the Jews to be a sacrifice in his day.

Thus then upon the whole it appears, that when St. Paul declares, that Christ our passover has been sacrificed for us, there can be no question, that he means a true and effective sacrifice: and that Christ has been to Christians that species of sacrifice, which the passover had been to the Jews.

The question now arises, What was the nature of that sacrifice? The name of the institution, and the circumstances of its appointment, fully explain its import: the original word signifying to pass over, not merely in the sense of change of place, but in the sense of sparing, passing without injury; Jehovah in his work of destruction having passed over, and left in safety, the houses of the Israelites, on the door-posts of which the blood of the sacrificed lamb was sprinkled, whilst he slew the first born in all the houses of the Egyptians.

Now, that the blood of the sacrificed lamb had any natural virtue, whereby the family, on whose door-posts it was sprinkled, might be preserved from the plague; or that Jehovah, † in passing, needed any such signal to distinguish between the Egyptians and the Israelites, (although the philosophy of Dr. Priestley has not scrupled to admit the supposition, see Th. Rep. vol. i. p. 215.)—it cannot be necessary to controvert. For what purpose, then, can we conceive such a ceremony to have been instituted, but as a sensible token of the fulfilment of the divine promise of protection and deliverance? And are we not, from the language of Scripture, fully authorized to pronounce, that it was through this, intended as a typical sign of protection from the divine justice, by the blood of Christ, which in reference to this is called, in Hebr. xii. 24. “the blood of sprinkling”? Indeed the analogy is so forcible, that Cudworth does not hesitate to pronounce the εγγυονει; ε φημι εγω, αλλ' οτι προεκηρυσσε την μελλουσαν δι' αιματος τε Χριστου γεννησεσθαι σωτηριαν τω γενει των ανθρωπων. Just. Mart. Thirlb. p. 374.

* Antiq. Jud. lib. iii. cap. x.—Josephi Opera, p. 93. A.

† Εμελλεν εν ο Θεος πλανασθαι ει μη το σημειον τωτο επι των θυρων

Patrick on Exod. xii. 13, remarks that the blood was “a sign, by which the Israelites were assured of safety and deliverance.”—And indeed the words of the original are, the blood shall be to you for a token.—Patrick adds from Epiphanius, that there was a memorial of the transaction preserved even among the Egyptians themselves, though ignorant of the original of the rite. For at the Equinox, (which was the time of the Passover,) they marked their cattle, and their trees, and one another, εκ μιλιτωρ, with red ochre, or some such thing, which they fancied would be a preservative to them. See Patrick as above.

slaying of the paschal lamb, in its first institution, to be an expiatory sacrifice; the blood of the lamb sprinkled upon the door-posts of the houses, being the appointed means of preservation, by Jehovah's passing over. In confirmation also of the typical import of the ceremony, he notices a very extraordinary passage, quoted by Justin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho, from the antient copies of the bible: in which Ezra expounds, in a speech made before the celebration of the passover, the mystery of it as clearly relating to Christ: and which Justin concludes, was at a very early day expunged from the Hebrew copies by the Jews, as too manifestly favouring the cause of Christianity. The passage is too remarkable to omit. "This passover," saith Ezra to the people, "*is our Saviour and refuge; and if you can feel a firm persuasion, that we are about to humble and degrade him in this sign, and afterwards should place our sure trust and hope in him, then this place shall never be made desolate, saith the Lord of hosts: but if you do not believe in him, nor listen to that which he shall announce, ye shall be a derision to all nations." (Cudw. Int. Syst. Disc. p. 16.) L'Enfant thinks the words of St. Paul, 1 Cor. v. 7. are a direct allusion to the first sentence of the passage here cited—see Doddridge on 1 Cor. v. 7. Allix in his Judgment of the Jew. Ch. p. 333, says, that when John the Baptist speaks of the Lamb, which takes away the sins of the world, the type of the paschal lamb is alluded to: and that this appears the more clearly from two things taught amongst the Jews: 1. That the Shechinah delivered Israel out of Egypt: 2. That the Shechinah was typified by the paschal lamb.—But, in proof that the paschal lamb was a type of Christ, it is not necessary to resort to Jewish traditions. Scripture supplies the most decisive testimonies on the reason to doubt its having existed in any genuine copy of the Old Testament. Grabe gives it as his opinion, that the sentence which Justin thus testifies to have stood in the antient copies of Ezra, is rather to be considered as having crept in from a marginal addition by some early Christian, than as having been expunged from the later copies by Jewish fraud.

* Καὶ εἶπεν Ἐσδρας τῷ Λαῷ· Τὸτο τὸ πάσχα ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν, καὶ ἡ καταφυγὴ ἡμῶν. Καὶ εἰν διανοηθῆτε, καὶ ἀναβῆ υμῶν ἐπὶ τὴν καρδίαν, ὅτι μέλλομεν αὐτὸν ταπεινῆν ἐν σημεῖῳ, καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἐλπίζομεν ἐπ' αὐτὸν, ἕ μὴ ἐξημῶθῃ ὁ τόπος αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸν ἀπαντα χρόνον, λέγει ὁ Θεὸς τῶν δυνάμεων· Ἐὰν δὲ μὴ πιστεύσητε αὐτῷ, μὴδὲ εἰσακῆσητε τὴν κηρυγματος αὐτοῦ, ἐσεσθε ἐπιχάσμα τῶν ἐθνέσι. (Just. Mart. Thirlb. pp. 292, 293.)—Justin says that this passage was among the ἐξηγήσεις ὧν ἐξηγήσατο Ἐσδρας εἰς τὸν νόμον τὸν περὶ τοῦ πάσχα: and hence Mr. Whitaker concludes (Origin of Arianism, p. 305.) that it originally stood in Ezra vi. 19—22, and probably between the 20th and 21st verses. It must however be confessed, that the reasons assigned by the learned Commentator on the passage here quoted by Justin, leave some

point. St. John, and St. Paul, both directly assert it, (Joh. xix. 36. 1 Cor. v. 7.) and our Lord himself seems to affirm it in his institution of the Eucharist at the last supper. (Mat. xxvi. 26.) But whoever wishes to see this point fully examined, may consult Wits. Œcon. Fæd. de paschate; or the selection from that work in Jennings Jew. Ant. vol. ii. p. 201—208; or a yet more brief, and perhaps not less satisfactory, review of the subject, in Beausob. & L'Enfant's Introd. p. 133—138.

Dr. Priestley's mode of evading the force of the passage in 1 Cor. v. 7. as a proof that the death of Christ was a sacrifice, has been stated in the beginning of this Number. I shall conclude it by noticing a different mode, adopted by a celebrated fellow labourer of his in the work of refining away the fair and natural meaning of Scripture language, Dr. Sykes. In the words, Christ our passover is sacrificed for us, a plain unbiassed understanding would find it difficult not to discover, that the passover is affirmed to be a sacrifice; and that, in some corresponding sense, Christ is said to be sacrificed for us. Dr. Priestley, as we have seen, avoids the latter position, by a direct denial of the former. Dr. Sykes, on the other hand, admits the former, and yet peremptorily rejects the latter. Now though Dr. Priestley's assertion, that the passover is not here pronounced to be a sacrifice, may appear sufficiently bold: yet the position, that it is called a sacrifice, and that Christ is not in the same sentence said to be sacrificed, seems a flight of criticism, still more worthy of our admiration. On what ground an exposition so extraordinary is founded, it is natural to enquire. Christ, we are told, is called our passover, inasmuch as by his means our sins are passed over, just as by means of the paschal lamb the children of Israel were passed over in Egypt. So far is well. But how is he said to be sacrificed for us?—why, by not being sacrificed at all; but, by being compared to the paschal lamb, which was a sacrifice!!! Here is true logic, and rational criticism.—If the reader should doubt this to be a fair representation of Dr. Sykes's argument, I refer him to the learned Doctor himself, Scripture Doctrine of Redemption, no. 640. p. 220.

In justification of what has been advanced in the preceding Number (p. 304.) on the signification of the word פסח, I subjoin the following observations.

This Hebrew word which we translate Passover, was rendered by almost all the early interpreters, in the sense which the English word implies; namely passing over. Josephus, who calls it πασχα, and sometimes φασκα, expressly affirms, that the Hebrew word signifies υπερλασια, or passing over; in commemoration of God's having passed over (υπερλας) the Hebrews, when he smote the Egyptians with his plague. (Antiq. p. 65.)—Philo, in two distinct parts of his works, explains the word by the term διαλασις, which he uses unequivocally in the sense of passing over, i. e. from place to place. (Opera. pp. 392. 439.) And again, in p. 686, he employs the term τα διαλατηρια, the passings over, or from place to place.—Aquila in his version renders the word by υπερλασις, a passing over, using nearly the same term with Josephus.—And Jerome adopts the word transitus, as the just equivalent of the Hebrew.

Thus far there appears a perfect agreement amongst the antient versions; affording at the same time a full justification of the phrase by which we render the Hebrew term in our common English bibles. Some commentators however, and those of no mean note, for example Vitringa and Lowth, Dathe and Rosenmuller, have raised doubts as to the propriety of the sense conveyed by the word passover, in explication of the original term פסח. The difficulties, that weigh with the two latter, are however of a nature, to which, I cannot help thinking, these critics have attached an importance beyond what is justly due. That the Arabic language does not ascribe the sense of transitio to the word, seems by no means a proof that it cannot admit that meaning, as these authors contend. (Dath. and Rosenm. on Exod. xii. 11. and Dathe more fully, in Glass. Phil. Sacr. pp. 968, 969.) Objections drawn from the kindred dialects ought to be admitted, only in the case of such words as are in themselves of doubtful signification, receiving no illustration either from corresponding passages, or from early versions. Very different is the case of the term in question. Not only, as we have seen, do some of the earliest and most competent translators attribute to it the sense already stated, but several passages of Scripture justify that sense by a corresponding use of the verb from which the word is derived. This will appear by considering the several verses of the twelfth chapter of Exodus, in which the institution of the Passover is prescribed, and the reason of its designation by that term expressly assigned.

The communication is first made to Moses by Jehovah.—11. “It is the Lord’s passover. (סַח.) 12. For I will pass (ועברתי) through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first born in the land of Egypt.—13. And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where you are: and when I see the blood, I will pass over you, (ופסחתי עלכם) and the plague shall not be upon you for destruction, whilst I smite the land of Egypt.”—Again in verse 23. this communication of Jehovah is conveyed by Moses to the elders of the people in the following words:—“For the Lord will pass (עבר) thro’ to smite the Egyptians, and when he seeth the blood, &c. the Lord will pass over the door (וּפסח יהוה על הדלת) and will not suffer the destruction (or destroying plague) to come into your houses to smite you.”—And lastly in the 27th verse, when Moses instructs them as to the manner in which they are to explain the rite to their descendants, he tells them that they shall say, “it is the sacrifice of the Lord’s passover (זבח פסח) who passed (פסח) over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians and delivered our houses.”

Now it is evident, that if the verb פסח has been rightly interpreted throughout these passages, the noun derived from it has been rightly explained.—Let us then here consult the versions. The Septuagint, which uses the Hebrew term throughout for the noun, (viz. πασχα—and so through the Pentateuch; but in Chron. φασεκ,) employs different words in rendering the verb. In verse 23, it renders by παρελευσεται, the very same word by which it translates the verb עבר in the same verse. That the Seventy therefore admitted the word to bear the sense of transitus, or passing over, there can be no question. They have, it is true, translated the verb by the word σκεπαζω, in the 13th and 27th verses: but the sense, in which they intend that word, may well be doubted, when we find it employed by them in 1 Samuel xxiii. 26. to denote the tumultuous and eager haste of David to accomplish his escape. If however we suppose it in this place to imply protection or preservation, the Seventy have then substituted the effect of that act of passing over for the act itself: and felt themselves justified in doing so, as they had at the same time secured the word against abuse by giving (as has been mentioned) its literal acceptation. In like manner we find that the other Greek translators, Aquila, Theodotion and Symmachus, have rendered the participle פָּסַח by υπερβαιων (passing over) in Isai. xxxi. 5, where the term is commonly conceived to be used in direct reference to its application here. The LXX there use the term περιποιησεται, instead of which Ms. Pachom. reads περιβησεται, which Bishop Lowth deems the true reading.

There are versions however yet to be noted, which assign to the word פָּסַח, as it occurs in Exod. xii. a sense different from that which we have hitherto assigned. In verse 11, the Targum and Persic both render the noun by pardon, sparing mercy. Sacrificium propitiationis (Arab.) — Sacrif. pro misericordiâ coram Domino (Ch.) — And again, verses 13, 23, 27, Syr. Arab. Pers. and Targ. render the verb in the same sense, that of sparing; quod miseratus est. (Ch.) propitiatus. (Syr. Arab.) with which, as we have hinted, the $\sigma\kappa\epsilon\pi\alpha\sigma\epsilon$ of the LXX possibly concurs.—The Complutensian, in deference to the above authorities, has interpreted the verb throughout this entire chapter by the words misereri, parcere: and many respectable commentators have adopted the same interpretation.

But how does this connect with the sense of passing over, supported by the former versions? Perhaps a little attention to the radical meaning of the verb פסח may point out that connexion. Fagius, in locum, says, that the primary signification of the verb פסח is saltare, transilire; unde et claudum Hebræi פסח appellant, quod cum ingreditur, quasi saltare et subsilire videtur. Hence he adds, the name is derived a salto angeli devastatoris: and he adduces the authority of R. D. Kimchi to this head. That of R. Sol. Jarchi, adduced by Dr. Geddes, is more precise. “Oblatio ista (agni paschalis) vocatur Pesach, propter saltum, quo sanctus ille BENEDICTUS transibat domos Israelitarum inter domos Egyptiorum, et saliebat de Egyptio in Egyptium: Israelita autem intermedius incolumis relinquebatur.” This primary sense of springing rapidly, or with a bound, is that which is admitted generally by Hebrew scholars, and seems undoubtedly to be the true one. If then we consider it in this light, Jehovah, who is represented as carrying with him the destroying plague, in mercy to the Israelite passes rapidly over his house, and thereby saves it from the destruction which is borne along to the mansion of the Egyptian, on which it is allowed to rest and execute its fatal work. Thus the passing of Jehovah over, (that is, his rapidly passing over) the houses of the Israelites, and the sparing, or showing mercy to the Israelites, become naturally connected: and therefore either might reasonably be used by interpreters, as the signification of the term in this part of Scripture.

From this view of the case it appears, that Dr. Geddes, in his translation, and still more in his Critical Remarks, was not very far from a just idea of this subject: but unfortunately for himself, (from a quaintness, a love of singularity, and a total destitution of taste, which always made what was even right appear wrong in his hands—nullum quod tetigit non deformavit—) he clothed this just idea in a dress so grotesque, that even he himself was afterwards brought to see and admit the ludicrousness of the garb, which he had fixed upon this part of holy writ.—It is curious enough to trace the origin of the ridiculous epithet skip-offering, which has been adopted by this translator, in the writings of one of the most elegant and classical of our Hebrew critics, the celebrated Bishop Lowth; who expressly describes “the common notion of God’s passing over the houses of the Israelites to be, that seeing the blood, he passed over, or skipped, those houses," &c.

This last named critic, following the steps of Vitringa, has in a note upon Isaiah xxxi. 5, given an explanation of the term פָּסַח, with which the signification of the English word Pass-over is totally at variance. Both he and Vitringa admit the primary sense of the verb to be that of springing forward, or leaping forward, with rapidity, as it has been before explained; and seem to have altogether adopted the exposition of the word which we have quoted from Fagius. But the notion entertained by these distinguished critics, that two agents were concerned in the preservation of the Israelites on the night of the passover, has led them to assign to the word, as applied in Exodus, the signification of covering, i. e. protecting by covering (as Vitringa), or springing forward to cover and protect (as Lowth). "Here are manifestly" (says the Bishop) "two distinct agents, with which the notion of passing over is not consistent; for that supposes but one agent. The two agents are, the destroying angel passing through to smite every house; and Jehovah the protector, keeping pace with him; and who, seeing the door of the Israelite marked with the blood, the token prescribed, leaps forward, throws himself with a sudden motion in the way, opposes the destroying angel; and covers and protects that house against the destroying angel, nor suffers him to smite it."

Here is undoubtedly an imposing picture of the transaction, presented to the imagination of the reader; but certainly without any foundation, save what exists in the fancy of the writer. An inaccurate translation indeed of the 23d verse seems to afford some colour to this view of the transaction; ולא יתן המושחית לבא אל-בתיכם לנגף, being rendered in our common version, "And will not suffer THE DESTROYER to come into your houses to smite you." Rosenmuller attributes this wrong translation to the Septuagint.—"LXX verterunt ο σλοθρευων, secuti Judæorum opinionem, tribuentium angelo cuidam, fati ministro, fulgura, pestem et similia hominibus fatalia: quod commentum et multi Christiani interpretes repetierunt. Sed nil tale in textu." Schol. in Exod. xii. 23. Rosenmuller is undoubtedly right in asserting, that there is nothing whatever in the text to justify the idea of a second agent. Whoever reads over the entire chapter with any degree of care, will see, that the Jehovah, who prescribes the rite, is himself the agent throughout, without the least intimation of any other being concerned. For as to the verse above referred to, its true translation, which I have given in a former part of this discussion, removes at once every semblance of support which it could be supposed to afford to the contrary opinion: the word מושחית, (the same which is used in the 13th verse as well as in the 23d,) signifying perditio, vastatio, corruptio, exterminatio, (as see Pol. Syn. also Vatabl. on Exod. xii. 13.) and the נגף למשחית of the 13th verse signifying exactly the same as the משחית לנגף of the 23d, i. e. in both places, the destroying plague. Besides it must be remarked, that the expression suffer in the 23d verse, which seems to imply a distinct agent who would enter the house of the Israelite if not prevented, has no authority from the original; the strict translation being “he will not give,” or “cause,” (לא יתן); the word נתן never being used in the sense of permitting, without the ל marking the dative case of that to which the permission was granted: but the word משחית not only wants the sign of the dative here, but has actually that of the accusative (את) in MS. 69 of Kennicot’s.

It appears then, upon the whole, that the fancy of a twofold agent indulged in by Vitringa, Lowth, and some other Commentators, derives no support whatever from the text of Exodus: and therefore the objections, which that fancy alone suggested in opposition to the explanation which has been given of the word פסה, fall to the ground; whilst the admissions of those writers, as to the primary acceptation of the word, must be allowed to stand in confirmation of those very conclusions which they were desirous to overturn.

The passage in Isaiah indeed which they were engaged in elucidating, in some degree naturally led them to the view of the subject which we have just noticed. The Prophet having there described Jehovah as protecting Jerusalem, in like manner as mother birds protect by hovering over their young; and this being impossible to be conveyed by a term which merely implied passing over, and which, so far from indicating an overshadowing protection, on the contrary necessarily induced an exposure of the defenceless young, and this only the more sudden the more rapid was the transition: the commentators deemed it indispensable to extend the meaning of the word פסח (here employed) beyond the latter sense, and to give to it such a signification as would admit the former; and perceiving a strong similarity between the application of the term here, and to the deliverance in Egypt, they endeavoured to explain it in such a sense as would embrace both transactions; and were accordingly led to that interpretation of the term which required the twofold agency of which we have spoken. But why recur upon every occasion to the primary sense of a word? Are there not in every language numerous words, in which the derivative becomes the prevalent and appropriate sense? And if we suppose the deliverance from Egypt to have been alluded to by the Prophet, (which, as well from the general similitude of subject, as particularly from the use of the terms פסח and הוציל which are conjointly used in speaking of the passover and its effect in Exod. xii. 27, seems scarcely to admit of doubt), what could be more fit than to adopt that form of expression, which, from its familiar association with the deliverance from Egyptian bondage, had long been employed to designate that deliverance without any reference whatever to its primary acceptation. In other words, was it not most natural, that any providential preservation or deliverance of the Jewish people should be called by the word Pesach, the term used to denominate that recorded act whereby the first great preservation and deliverance of Israel was effected? Might not then the Prophet have properly and beautifully employed the word פסח, in the passage referred to, in the sense of God's acting again as a protector and deliverer of his people, in like manner as he had done at the time of the פסח? This gives new beauty to the original passage, and relieves the comparison between its subject and the deliverance in Egypt from all embarrassments; whilst it retains all that attractive imagery, with which the prophet embellishes the original idea. The passage would then stand thus,

*As the mother-birds hovering over their young ;
So shall Jehovah, God of hosts, protect Jerusalem, Protecting and delivering, preserving (as by a second Pass-OVER) and rescuing her.*

Bishop Stock, in his translation, has much disfigured the beauty of this passage; neither displaying taste in the expression, nor judgment in the criticism:—Birds protecting the winged race, being neither elegant nor quite intelligible: and HOPPING round and over, which is rather an odd signification of the word פסח, being a still odder reason for translating the word by FLYING round.

Some have charged the Greeks with corrupting the original word פסח Pesach, by writing it πασχα; and have seemed to intimate that the word was so used by them as if it were derived from πασχω patior, intimating the sufferings of our Lord, of which the slaying of the passover was a type. That such an allusion may have sometimes been made as might afford some apparent justification to the charge, there seems reason to admit. (See Glass. Phil. Sacr. i. 692. also Greg. Naz. Serm. de Pasch. and Wolf. Cur. Phil. i. 365.) Yet the fact is, that the פסח of the Hebrew is written פסחא Pascha in the Chaldee, from which the πασχα of the Greek has immediately flowed.

On the subject of the word Passover, I shall only add the following enumeration of its various applications. 1. It signifies the passing over of Jehovah who spared the Israelites when he smote the first-born of the Egyptians. 2. It signifies by a metonymy the lamb slain in memory of that deliverance. 3. It signifies the feast day on which the paschal lamb was slain—viz. the 14th of the first month. 4, and lastly, It signifies the entire continuance and the whole employment of the festival, which commenced with the slaying of the lamb, and continued for seven days.

NO. XXXVI.—ON THE MEANING OF THE WORD TRANSLATED ATONEMENT IN THE OLD TES-TAMENT.

PAGE 32. (m)—The meaning of the word כַּפַּר, the original of the term atonement in the Old Testament, has been modelled, like that of other scripture phrases, so as to fall in with the theories of those, who are more anxious that scripture should speak their language, than that they should speak the language of scripture. The common artifice, by which the terms of revelation have been discharged of all appropriate meaning, has been here employed with considerable effect. By a comparison of the various passages, in which the term occurs, its most general signification is first explored; and in this generic sense it is afterwards explained, in all the particular cases of its application. The manner, in which Doctor Taylor has exercised this strange species of criticism on the word atonement, in his Scripture Doctrine, has been already noticed, p. 181—186. One or two additional remarks, will more fully explain the contrivance, by which this writer has been enabled to shape this expression to his purpose.

Having laid it down as a principle, “ that those passages in the Levitical law, in which atonement is said to be made for persons by sacrifice, supply not so many different instances of a known sense of the word, atonement; but are to be considered as exhibiting one single instance of a sense which is doubtful;" (Scrip. Doct. ch. iv. § 69.) he pronounces, (ch. v. § 70) that "the texts, which are to be examined, are those, where the word is used extra-levitically, or with no relation to sacrifices; that we may be able to judge, what it imports when applied to them." And agreeably to these notions, he conducts his enquiry. Now what is this, but to pronounce first upon the nature of the thing unknown, and then to engage in its investigation? The meaning of the term, in the several instances of its Levitical application, though as yet supposed unknown, is presumed to be the same in all: and this, notwithstanding these cases of its application must be as different as its objects; persons, and things; moral, and ceremonial, disqualifications.

But not content with thus deciding on the uniformity of an unknown signification, he proceeds to discover the meaning of the term, in those passages which relate to sacrifice, by examining it in others, in which it has no such relation. The result of this singularly critical examination is, that from 57 texts, which treat of extra-levitical atonements, it may be inferred, "that the means of making atonement for sin in different cases, are widely different; being sometimes by the sole goodness of God, sometimes by the prayers of good men, sometimes by repentance, sometimes by disciplinary visitation, sometimes by signal acts of justice and virtue: and that any mean, whereby sinners are reformed, and the judgments of God averted, is atoning, or making atonement, for their sins;" (cap. 6. § 112.) What then follows respecting the Levitical atonement? Not, that the word, which when used extra-levitically is taken in various senses according to the natural efficacy of the different means employed, is to be applied in its Levitical designation in a sense yet different from these, agreeable to the difference of means introduced by the Levitical institutions. Quite the contrary. When specifically restricted to an appropriate purpose, it ceases to have any distinguishing character: and the term, whose signification when it had no relation to sacrifice, was diversified with the nature of the means and the circumstances of the occasion, is upon assuming this new relation pronounced incapable of any new and characteristic meaning. This argument furnishes a striking instance of that species of sophism; which, from a partial, concludes a total agreement. Having discovered, by a review of those passages, which treat of extra-levitical atonements, that these and the sacrifices which were offered for sin, agreed in their effect; namely, in procuring the pardon of sin, or the removal of those calamities which had been inflicted as the punishment of it:

the writer at once pronounces the extra-levitical and the sacrificial atonements to have been of the same nature throughout, without regarding the utter dissimilarity of the means employed, and without considering that the very question as to the nature of the atonement, is a question involving the means through which it was effected.

But whilst Doctor Taylor has thus endeavoured to overturn the generally received notion of atonement, by an examination of such passages, as treat of those atonements which were not sacrificial: Doctor Priestley professes to have carefully reviewed all those instances of atonement, which were sacrificial; and from this review to have deduced the inference, that the sacrificial atonement merely implies, "the making of any thing clean or holy, so as to be fit to be used in the service of God; or when applied to a person, fit to come into the presence of God: God being considered, as in a peculiar manner, the king and the sovereign of the Israelitish nation, and as it were keeping a court amongst them." (Hist of Cor. vol. i. p. 193.) Doctor Priestley, by this representation of the matter, endeavours to remove from view, whatever might lead the mind to the idea of propitiating the Deity; and by taking care to place the condition of persons and things on the same ground, utterly discards the notion of offence and reconciliation. But in order to effect this, he has been obliged wholly to overlook the force of the original word, which is translated atonement;

as well as of that, which the LXX have used as its equivalent.

The term כָּפַר, in its primary sense, signifies to smear, or cover with pitch, as appears from Gen. vi. 14: and from this covering with pitch, it has been metaphorically transferred to things of a different nature; insomuch that, in all the 37 instances of extra-levitical atonement adduced by Doctor Taylor, he asserts, that the word כָּפַר retains something of this original sense (Scrip. Doctrine, ch. vi. § 115.): and agreeably to this, he pronounces “atonement for sin to be the covering of sin.” This position seems fully confirmed by Nehem. iv. 45. Psal. xxxii. 1. lxxxv. 2. and other passages in Scripture; in which the pardon of sin is expressed by its being covered, and the punishment of it by its not being covered. And Schindler, in his Lexicon Pentaglotton, having in like manner fixed the general signification of the word to be tegit, operuit, modifies this generic signification, according to the change of subject, thus:—de facie, seu irâ, placavit, reconciliavit; de peccato, remisit, condonavit, expiavit; de sordibus, expurgavit; de aliis, abstulit, removit.

Agreeably to this explanation of the word, in which Hebrew critics almost universally concur, the LXX render it by ἐξίλασσομαι, to appease, or make propitious, and the antient Latin by exorare, and sometimes deprecari: (see Sabatier's Vet. Ital.) the concealing, and removing from view, whatever is offensive and displeasing to a person being necessary to reconcile him and render him propitious. And indeed, in a sense agreeable to this, that of bringing into a state of concord and reconciliation, the word atonement itself had been originally used by our old English writers; with whom, according to Junius, Skinner, and Johnson, it was written at-one-ment, signifying to be at one, or to come to an agreement: and in this very sense we find it used by our own translators, in Levit. xvi. 16. 20, where speaking of the act, whereby the High Priest was directed to make atonement for the holy place, they immediately after call it reconciling the holy place.

But Doctor Priestley has not only neglected the original and strict signification of the term implying sacrificial atonement, and imposed upon it a sense which at best is but secondary and remote, but he has also decided on a partial and hasty view of the subject, even as confined to the English translation: for surely, although it be in every case of atonement evidently implied, that the thing or person atoned for was thereby cleansed, and so rendered fit for the service of God; it must likewise be admitted, that by this they were rendered pleasing to God, having been before in a state impure and unfit for his service, and being now rendered objects of his approbation and acceptance as fit instruments of his worship. The fallacy of Doctor Priestley's interpretation consists in this, that he assumes that to be the sole end of the atonement, which although an undoubted consequence from it, was inseparably connected with, and subservient to, another and more important effect: the atonement indeed purifying, so as to qualify for the service and worship of God; but this purification consisting in the removal of that, which unfitted and disqualified for such sacred purposes; bringing what before was undeserving the divine regard into a state of agreement with the divine purity, and rendering it the object of the divine approbation. To make atonement then to God, was to remove what was offensive; and thus by conciliating the divine favour, to sanctify for the divine service.

This general meaning of the expression, modified by the circumstances of its application, will lead us to its true value and force in each particular instance. Thus, in the atonements at the consecration of the tabernacle, altars, vessels and priests; the several instruments and persons destined for the offices of worship, being in their natural state unworthy of this sacred use, were thereby purified from all natural pollution, and rendered fit objects of the divine acceptance. The same may be applied to those atonements appointed for restoring persons to the privileges of public worship, who had been disqualified by circumstances of external impurity, such as were occasioned by natural infirmities, diseases and accidental events. But whilst in these cases, in which moral character could have no concern, the purifying rite of atonement was enjoined, to render both things and persons worthy and approved instruments of the divine worship; so in those where moral character was concerned, the atonement made by the sacrifice for sin, qualified the transgressor for the divine service, by removing what had been offensive from the sight of him, who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; the repentance of the offender aided by the pious observance of the enjoined rite, averting the divine displeasure, and effecting a reconciliation with his offended sovereign: whilst those who were guilty of a presumptuous and deliberate defiance of the divine authority, were cut off from all connexion with their God, and no atonement whatever allowed for their transgressions. . Episcopus seems to state the case very satisfactorily—“Sacrificia pro peccato, ea erant, quæ offerebantur ad impuritates expiandas, sive eæ essent morales, sive physicæ aut potius ceremoniales. Morales impuritates voco, istas quæ animorum sunt: id est, quæ culpam aliquam ex animæ sive ignorantia, sive errore, sive imbecillitate ortam in se habent: impuritates enim, quæ per superbiam, &c. contrahebantur, sacrificiis expiari non poterant. Physicas sive ceremoniales impuritates voco, fæditates, sive maculas illas corporis, quæ nulla culpa hominis contrahi possunt: quales sunt quæ

ex leprosi, mortui contractu," &c.—Inst. Theol. Lib. III. Sect. II. cap. iii. vol. i. p. 71.

This view of the matter, seems to give to the whole of the Levitical atonement, a consistent and satisfactory meaning. The atonement, in all cases, producing the effect of fitting for the divine service:—this, in such as involved no consideration of moral character, (as in the consecration of inanimate things, or the atonement for persons labouring under corporeal impurities,) could consist only in the removal of the external impurity, for in such cases this impediment alone existed: whilst in those, in which moral character was concerned, as in cases of sin, whereby man having incurred the displeasure of his God, had disqualified himself for the offices of his worship, the unfitness could have been removed only by such means, as at the same time removed that displeasure, and restored the offender to the divine favour:—or in other words, the atonement was in such cases an act of propitiation. And to such cases it is, that it may be applied in the strict sense of the word reconciliation; so that the doctrine of atonement, as far as relates to sin, is nothing more than the doctrine of reconciliation.

As to the manner, in which the sacrifice for sin may be supposed to have operated, to the effecting this reconciliation, this is of no concern to the present enquiry. That a reconciliation was thereby effected, insomuch that the penalty of the transgression was remitted, and the offender restored to the privileges which he had forfeited by his offence, is abundantly manifest. The instances in scripture, in which the effect of the atonement is expressly described as the removal of the divine displeasure, are too numerous to be recited. Let a few suffice.—In Exod. xxxii. 30, 32, Moses addressing the Israelites, after the great crime which they had committed in worshipping the golden calf, says, ye have sinned a great sin; and now I will go up unto the Lord; peradventure I shall make an ATONEMENT FOR YOUR SIN: and these words he immediately after explains, by his prayer to God, that he might forgive their sin. Again we find a stop put to an infliction of punishment, by the atonement made by Aaron for the people, in the rebellion of Korah. And Moses said, take a censer; and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them; for there is wrath gone out from the Lord; the plague is begun: and Aaron took as Moses commanded him; and made an atonement for the people—and the plague was stayed. Numb. xvi. 46, 47, 48. The atonement made by Phinehas, and the effect of it, are not less remarkable: God says of him, he hath TURNED MY WRATH AWAY from the children of Israel, (while he was zealous for my sake among them) that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy—he was zealous for his God, and made an ATONEMENT for the children of Israel. Numb. xxv. 11, 13.

The instances of atonement here adduced, are not indeed of the sacrificial kind; but they equally serve to evince the Scripture sense of the term, in cases of transgression, to be that of reconciling the offended deity, by averting his displeasure: so that, when the atonement for sin is said to be made by sacrifice, no doubt can remain, that the sacrifice was strictly a sacrifice of propitiation. Agreeably to this conclusion, we find it expressly declared, in the several cases of piacular oblations for transgression of the divine commands, that the sin, for which atonement was made by those oblations, should be forgiven.*

Doctor Priestley and H. Taylor have of late endeavoured to subvert this notion, by representing sacrifices merely as gifts, and atonement as nothing but a ceremonial purifying and setting apart from common use, for the divine service, without any idea whatever of propitiation: see Theol. Repos. vol. i. p. 199—205. and B. Mord. p. 799—805. How far this theory is invalidated by the observations contained in the present Number, it remains for the reader to judge. I shall only add, that Doctor Sykes, whose authority both these writers are in general very willing to acknowledge, does not hesitate to pronounce the sacrificial meaning of the word כפרת atone-

* See Levit. iv. 20, 26, 31, 35. v. 10, 13, 16, 18. vi. 7. xix. 22. Numb. xv. 25, 26, 28. Consult also Hallet's Notes and Discourses, vol. ii. p. 270—274.

ment, to contain the notion of propitiation; deriving it, as has been here done, from the original signification of the word כָּפַר to cover, that is, “to remove or take away anger or offence, by so covering it that it may not appear:” (Essay on Sacrifices, pp. 152. 158, 159,) and “to make atonement for sins” he says “is to do something by means of which a man obtains pardon of them.” (p. 306.)

How strongly the propitiatory import of the sacrificial atonement, contended for in this note, was attributed to it by modern Jews, has been already amply detailed in Number XXXIII.—In Doctor Laurence’s Sermon on the Metaphorical character of the Apostolical Style, (pp. 17. 32.) there are some good observations on the Targum of Jonathan, tending to confirm the position, that the ideas, of atonement, and of forgiveness, were held by the Jews in the time of our Saviour, as perfectly equivalent.

NO. XXXVII.—ON THE EFFICACY OF THE MOSAIC ATONEMENT AS APPLIED TO CASES OF MORAL TRANSGRESSION.

PAGE 33. (11)—For the purpose of reducing the sacrificial atonement to the simple notion of external purification, it has been thought necessary, to deny the appointment of any expiation for the transgressor of the moral law. It has been argued, that those sins and iniquities, for which, it is in several instances expressly said, that forgiveness was procured by the atonement, “do not in the language of the Old Testament necessarily imply a deviation from moral rectitude, or a transgression of the moral law; but are frequently used, when nothing more can be understood, than a privation of that bodily purity, which the ceremonial law required; as we read of the iniquity of the sanctuary, (Numb. xviii. 1.) and of the iniquity of the holy things, (Exod. xxviii. 38.); and as we find the ashes of the burnt heifer, though applied only for the purification of external uncleanness, expressly called ‘the ashes of the burnt heifer of purification for sin;' (Numb. xix. 7.) and in like manner, the oblation required from him who had recovered from a leprosy, a sin-offering: the unclean person, though free from blame in a moral point of view, yet in the eye of the law being deemed a sinner.” These observations, it is but fair to confess, are to be found in the pages of one of the ablest advocates of the doctrine of atonement. It is also urged, that the sins, for which atonement were appointed, were at most but sins of ignorance; to which scarcely any moral character could attach, and which deserved to be ranked in the same class with mere natural or accidental infirmities. This latter point is largely insisted on by writers, who oppose the received doctrine of atonement; and is particularly enforced by a writer in Theol. Rep. vol. iii. who signs himself Eusebius; and who professes to enter fully into an examination of the several cases of atonement, recorded in the Old Testament.

In reply to the first of these arguments, let it be remarked, 1. That the expressions so much relied on, iniquity of the holy things, iniquity of the sanctuary, mean merely the profanation, or improper use of the holy things, &c.; so that the iniquity here refers to the persons making this improper use of the holy things not to the things themselves: and thus the entire objection, derived from the use of this expression, falls to the ground. This appears, as well from the force of the term in the original, which is translated iniquity; as from the context of the passages referred to. The Hebrew word py being derived from ny, the strict signification of which is to turn, or be turned, aside from the proper state or destination, applies with peculiar propriety to the improper, or profane use of the holy things of the sanctuary. And this sense is supported by the passages in which the expression occurs: the Priests bearing the iniquity of the Sanctuary, (Numb. xviii. 1.) and Aaron bearing the iniquity of the holy things, (Ex. xxviii. 38.) manifestly relating, and being understood by every commentator to relate, to the care to be taken that no improper use or legal defilement should profane the sacred things; inasmuch as, in such case, it would rest with Aaron, and with the priests, to bear the punishment of, or make atonement for, such profanation. Thus Jarchi on Num. xviii. 1. "Upon you I will bring the punishment of the strangers, that shall sin concerning the sanctified things that are delivered unto you." Houbigant translates the words in Numb. sustinebit sanctuarii noxas; i. e. as he explains it, reus erit delicti in sanctuarium admissi—and in Exodus, suscipiet maculas donorum.—See also Ainsworth, Patrick, Calmet, Le Clerc, Dathius, and in short, all the commentators, who concur in this interpretation, and in like manner explain the passage in Exodus: see likewise Levit. xvi. 16—19.

But as the word iniquity, thus applied to the sacred things, will not prove, that by sin, in the Levitical law, nothing more was intended than external defilement; so neither will, 2. The application of the term sin and sin offering to persons labouring under mere corporeal impurities. Respecting the case of the burnt heifer, in which though intended solely for the purification of external uncleanness, the ashes are expressly called the ashes of the burnt heifer of purification for sin, it must be noted, that the argument here is chiefly derived from the words of the translation, without attending sufficiently to the original: the words in the Hebrew signifying literally, the ashes of the burnt sin-offering.* Purification for sin then is not the language of the original; and from this consequently nothing can be inferred. But admitting even, that the corporeal impurities arising from leprosy, puerperity, contact of the dead, and other such causes, are spoken of as sins committed by the persons labouring under them, in like manner as the direct and voluntary transgressions of the divine commands; admitting, that it is pronounced of the former, equally as of the latter, that in virtue of the atonement, the sin which had been COMMITTED, was FORGIVEN them: admitting, that the sin-offering, on these occasions, looked solely to the uncleanness, without having any respect to the general sinfulness and unworthiness of the person seeking to be restored to the privileges of the public worship of God: and admitting, that in looking to the particular instance of uncleanness, it could not have been intended (as the later Jews explain it, see p. 268. †) through that, to have referred to that original guilt incurring the penalty of death, from which this and the other infirmities, of man's nature, had taken their rise; or to some specific crime, by which these bodily inflictions had been incurred: *—admitting, I say, all these things, (which however it would be extremely difficult to prove,) and consequently admitting, that the terms, sin, and sin-offering, as applied to these, could merely signify external uncleanness, and the appointed means of removing it; yet can this furnish no inference whatever, affecting those cases, in which the disqualification to be removed by the sin-offering, is expressly stated to be, not that of external uncleanness, but resulting from a transgression of the divine commands. This, however it may be called a legal offence, cannot be thereby divested of its intrinsic nature, but must still inevitably remain a moral transgression. And when atonement is said to be made for sins committed against any of the commandments of the Lord, it must surely be a strange species of interpretation, that can confound such sins with mere external pollution; and the forgiveness granted to such offences, with the mere cleansing from an accidental impurity. It will appear yet more strange, when we come to notice under the next head, some specific violations of the moral law, for which atonements were appointed.

* See Ainsworth, Patrick, and Dathe, on Numb. xix. 17. also Richie's Pecul. Doctr. vol. i. p. 212.

† See also Ainsworth, on Numb. xix. 16. Lev. xii. 7, and xiv. 32. 34. 49. and Jennings's Jew. Antiq. vol. i. p. 322.

But it is contended, that those transgressions of the divine commands, for which atonements were appointed, were merely sins of ignorance :

* See Episcopus, de lepra, Inst. Theol. L. III. sect. ii. cap. 3. § 33.—also p. 268, of this volume.

to which, as the writer in the Theol. Rep. pronounces, scarcely any moral character could attach; and which therefore might justly be ranked in the same class, with the former cases of accidental defilement. As this argument has been a good deal relied on, it becomes necessary to consider more particularly, the nature of those transgressions, for which atonements were appointed; and the force of that expression in the original, which has been usually understood as implying sins of ignorance.

And 1. it must certainly be admitted, that sins of ignorance, in the direct sense of the word, are intended by the expression, since we find it expressly stated in some places that they wist it not; and again that the sins were done without their knowledge, and were hidden from them, and had come to their knowledge after they were committed. (Levit. iv. 13, 14, 23, 28. v. 2, 3, 17, 18. Numb. xv. 24.) Yet even here, the ignorance intended cannot have been of a nature absolute and invincible, but such as the clear promulgation of their law, and their strict obligation to study it day and night, rendered them accountable for, and which was consequently in a certain degree culpable. Thus Houbigant, on Lev. iv. 2. Nos per imprudentiam, ut multi alii per errorem; melius quam Vulgatus, per ignorantiam. Nam leges per Mosen promulgatas, et saepe iteratas, ignorare Israelitæ non poterant. This is also agreeable to the general language of Scripture; in which, crimes said to be committed by persons, κατα αγνοιαν, in ignorance, are nevertheless represented strictly as crimes, inasmuch as that ignorance might have been removed by a careful and candid search after their duty; and thus, being voluntary, their ignorance itself was criminal. See Acts iii. 17, where the Jews, who crucified Christ, are said to have acted κατα αγνοιαν. St. Paul also ascribes the enormous wickedness of the Heathen world to the ignorance that was in them, Eph. iv. 18. And their vicious desires, St. Peter calls, εν τη αγνοια επιθυμιας, lusts in ignorance, 1 Pet. i. 14.*

Thus then, even though the expression in the original were confined to sins of ignorance, yet would it not follow, that it meant such acts as were incapable of all moral character, and might be classed with mere corporeal infirmities to which the notion of punishment could not possibly attach. But, that the expression, beside sins of ignorance, includes likewise all such as were the consequence of human frailty and inconsideration, whether committed knowingly and wilfully or otherwise, will appear from considering the true force of the original term שגגה, or משגה, which together with its root שגג, שגה, or שג, is found, in numerous passages of Scripture, to signify the species of offence here described, in opposition to that which involves a deliberate and presumptuous contempt of God's authority. Cocceius thus explains it—"Si, putantes licitum, fecerint illicitum, ignorantia verbi: aut, si præoccupatus egerit, quod novit esse illicitum." The word, he says, as it occurs in Numb. xv. 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, is directly opposed to בגד רמה, in verse 30, sinning with a high hand, that is, deliberately and presumptuously. He also explains it, as implying a full and entire engrossment of mind and affection, producing a temporary oblivion of what is right: which is nothing more than the common effect of any passion which has taken strong hold of the mind. For this he instances Isai. xxviii. 7. In like manner Doctor Taylor, in his Concordance, understands the word—"שגג, to err, to do what is wrong, through ignorance, mistake, bad advice, or persuasion—or through the violence of some strong passion or affection." Doctor Richie also, (Pecul. Doct. vol. i. pp. 226, 227.) adduces a great number of passages to prove, that the word in question "denotes any sin, which doth not proceed from a deliberate contempt of authority, but from human frailty or infirmity only." See also Hammond, Le Clerc, and Rosenmüller, in Hebr. ix. 7.—where they supply numerous instances to prove, that both αγνοειν, and שגג, are used in the sense here given, as extending to all sins that were not of the class of presumptuous, or such as by the law were necessarily to be punished with death. Rosenmüller adds, that for every sin, except those to which death was annexed, atonement was made on the day of expiation. Now it is remarkable, that for the sins atoned for on that day, the very word which is used by the Apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrews, (ix. 7.) is αγνοηματα.* But, in fact, the

* See also Acts xvii. 30. Rom. x. 3. 1 Tim. i. 13. and numerous other passages of the New Testament.

* Schleusner in his Spicileg. Lexic. in Int. Græc. V. T. p. 3. thus explains the words αγνωση and αγνοημα. “Αγνωση notat simpliciter pecco, sine adjunctiâ notione ignorantie. Erravit Bielius, qui αγνοειν tantum ex ignorantia peccare notare dicit. Cf. Sirac. v. 18. εν μεγαλω και μικρω μη αγνοει, μηδε εν: h. e. nullum plane peccatum committe, nec grave nec leve. Hæc notio etiam ex Hebraicis verbis גנח, חטא, et נחש, quibus αγνοειν in verss. græc. respondet, apparet.”— “Αγνοηματα, peccata simpliciter. 1 Macc. xiii. 39. ubi cum vocabulo αμαρτηματα permutatur. (Cf. Levit. xxvi. 39. ubi Hebraicum נחש Aqu. αγνοειν reddit.) Locum e Philone huc facientem dedit cl. Loesnerus ad Hebr. ix. 7. Sic αγνομονειν apud Xen. Hist. Græc. I. 7. 10. simpliciter inique agere notat: ubi bene præcipit S. R. Morus, verba apud Græcos, vi originis scientiam aut inscientiam exprimentia, uti in omnibus linguis, notare virtutes et vitia, quæ illam scientiam et inscientiam, vel necessario, vel plerumque sequi soleant.”

Loesner also remarks thus on the words, υπερ εαυτη και των τε λαω ΑΓΝΟΗΜΑΤΩΝ, in Hebr. ix. 7.—“Apud Alexandrinos Interpp. locis pluribus αγνοιας vel αγνοηματα de peccatis et delictis quibusvis ad exprimendum Hebraicum חטאת dici, ignotum esse harum literarum amantibus non potest. Adjungamus Philonem lib. de Plant. Noc. p. 229. c. scribentem, θυσιας υπομνησκεισιν τας εκασων ΑΓΝΟΙΑΣ το και opposition already alluded to in Numb. xv. 27, 30, seems at once to decide the point. For there we find the sins implied by the word שגגה, directly opposed to sins of presumption: that is, to διαμαρτίας, victimæ in memoriam revocant singulorum peccata et delicta."

The observations also of Danzins, on the word αγνοηματα in the aforementioned passage of Hebr. deserve particularly to be attended to. "Peccata quæ expianda sunt, vocantur hic αγνοηματα. Quæ Socinianis haud alia sunt, quam quæ vel ignorantia sive oblivione juris alicujus divini, vel ex ignorantia facti et circumstantiarum, vel etiam ex humanâ quâdam imbecillitate proficiscuntur. Equidem concedendum omnino est, αγνοηματα hinc inde in scriptis sacris ac profanis pro hujus generis extare peccatis. Quod autem et voluntaria ac graviora haud raro denotet, satis superque docent dicta Psal. xxv. 7. ubi עָשָׂה (quod quam magnum designet peccatum, mox dicturi sumus) LXX reddiderunt per αγνοιαν. Hoseæ iv. 15. spiritualis Israelitarum scortatio per verbum αγνοεω, pro Ebraico חָטָא positum, exprimitur; quæ sane leve ac ex ignorantia commissum peccatum non fuit: prouti ex toto hoc capite satis clare apparet. Etiam Jnd. v. 19, 20. pro quibusvis delictis idem vocabulum ponitur. Hinc et Syrus interpres pro αγνοηματα Apostoli in loco citato, (viz: Hebr. ix. 7.) posuit ἁμαρτια: quâ voce quævis designantur peccata (vide Matth. xviii. 35), etiam illud ab Adamo perpetratum (vid. Rom. v. 16. sqq.), quod certe nec leve fuit, nec ex ignorantia commissum. Imo ex collatione loci Lev. xvi. sole lucidius patet, hic sub voce των αγνοηματων omnis generis contineri peccata. Siquidem ibi satis perspicue docetur, omnia peccata, in anniversario isto sacrificio expiari. Et quidem omnia illa, quæ supra vocibus עָשָׂה, עָשָׂה, ac חָטָא erant expressa. Atque sub se continent quidquid omnino venit sub peccati nomine." The writer then proceeds, such as proceeded, not from human frailty, but from a deliberate and audacious defiance of the divine authority, which appears to be the true meaning of presumptuous sins, as may be collected from Numb. xv. 30, 31. Exod. xxi. 14—and v. 2. compared with xviii. 11. Deut. i. 42, 43. xvii. 12, 13. xviii. 22, and various other passages. See Pec. Doct. vol. i. pp. 229, 230. also Maim. Mor. Nev. part 3. cap. 1. And hence it appears, that so far as the force of the original term is considered, the efficacy of the atonement was extended to all sins, which flowed from the infirmities and passions of human nature; and was withheld only from those, which sprung from a presumptuous defiance of the Creator.

The word ακροσως, used by the LXX in the translation of the term, though it seems to imply an involuntary act, is yet by no means inconsistent with this exposition. The force of this term, as applied by the LXX, is evidently not incompatible with a perfect consciousness of the crime committed, and is used only in opposition to εκροσως, by which they every where describe such an act as from a strict investigation of the exact sense of these Hebrew words, as well as from a copious enumeration of the opinions of the great Jewish doctors, to confirm his position, that in the word αγρονηματα, as used by the apostle, (Hebr. ix. 7.) sins of every description are indiscriminately alluded to. See Danz. Funct. Pontif. Max. in Adyt. Anniv. in Meuschen's Nov. Test. ex Talm. p. 1007—1012.

is entirely spontaneous and deliberate, which in the words of Episcopius is performed, plena voluntate; or as he again explains it, which is done wilfully, and with a fixed and deliberate purpose of transgressing. (Inst. Theol. Lib. iii. sect. ii. cap. 3. § 9, 14.) Ἀκρωτως then is not to be considered, as denoting an act strictly speaking involuntary; but as opposed to what was deliberate and wilful: it is therefore applied with propriety to all sins of infirmity. The use of the word ἄκρωτως in Hebr. x. 26, throws abundant light on the force of this expression. See Ainsworth on Lev. iv. 2. See also the authorities adduced by Elsner, Observat. Sacr. vol. i. p. 494.

But 2ndly, the conclusion, which has been here derived from the signification of the original word, is fully confirmed by the cases of atonement referred to in the text; since the offences there described are clearly such, as can by no means be brought within the description of sins of ignorance: it being impossible that a man could deny, or keep back, that which was entrusted to him by another; or take from another his property by violence or deceit; or deny upon oath, and withhold from the proper owner, what he had found, without a consciousness of the guilt. Besides, it is to be observed, that neither in these, nor in the case of the bond-maid, is it said that the sin was committed in ignorance: but, on the contrary, the very expressions used in the original, unequivocally mark a consciousness of crime in the several instances alluded to, as may be seen particularly in Outram De Sacrif. lib. i. cap. xiii. § 4. where this point is fully established in opposition to Episcopius. These crimes indeed of fraud, perjury, violent injustice, and debauchery, the writer in the Theol. Rep. seems disposed to treat as venial offences, being criminal, as he says, but in a low degree. (Vol. iii. p. 412.) But for the purpose of proving, that no atonements were appointed for transgressions of the moral law, it would be necessary to shew that these acts were not in any degree criminal: this however he has not attempted, and is consequently in the conclusion compelled to admit, (p. 414.) that the Levitical atonements extended to violations of the moral law. Sykes also, it must be observed, is obliged to confess, that the cases here alluded to, are cases of "known and open wickedness." (Scr. Doct. of Redemp. p. 331.) Hallet expressly says, "it is certain, that there were sacrifices under the law appointed to make atonement for moral evil, and for moral guilt; particularly for lying, theft, fraud, extortion, perjury, as it is written, Lev. vi. 1, 2, &c."—Notes and Discourses, vol. ii. p. 277, 278.

Now, that these atonements in cases of moral transgression, involved a real and literal remission of the offence, that is of the penalty annexed to it, will appear from considering, not only the rigorous sanction of the Mosaic law in general, by which he, who did not continue in ALL the words of the law to do them, was pronounced accursed, (Gal. iii. 10. Deut. xxvii. 26.) and consequently subjected to the severest temporary inflictions; but also the particular cases, in which the particular sacrifices are directly stated, to have procured a release from the temporal punishments specifically annexed to the transgression: as in the cases of fraud, false-swearing, &c. which, with the punishments annexed by the law, and the remission procured by the particular oblation, may be seen enumerated by Grotius (De Satisfact. Chr. cap. x.) and still more fully by Richie. (Pecul. Doct. vol. i. p. 232—252.) Houbigant also speaks of it, as a matter beyond question, that in such offences as admitted of expiation under the Mosaic law, a release from the temporal penalty of the transgression was the necessary result of the atonement: on Levit. v. 4. he describes the effect of the atonement to be, “ut post expiationem religione factam, non sit amplius legum civilium pœnis obnoxius.” Hallet says, that the sacrifices “procured for the offender, a deliverance from that punishment of moral guilt, which was appointed by the law;” and instances the case of theft, in which though the offender was liable to be cut off by the miraculous judgment of God, yet the sacrifice had the virtue of releasing from that immediate death, which the law had denounced against that particular sin. Notes and Disc. p. 276—278.

That the remission of sins obtained by the Levitical sacrifices, was a remission only of temporal punishments, cannot weaken the general argument; as the sanctions of the law, under which the sacrifices were offered, were themselves but temporary. The remission of the penalty due to the transgression was still real and substantial: the punishment was averted from the offender, who conformed to the appointed rite: and the sacrificial atonement was consequently, in such cases, an act of propitiation. The sacrifices of the law, indeed, considered merely as the performance of a ceremonial duty, could operate only to the reversal of a ceremonial forfeiture, or the remission of a temporal punishment: that is, they could propitiate God only in his temporal relation to his chosen people, as their Sovereign: and for this plain reason, because the ostensible performance of the rite being but an act of external submission and homage, when not accompanied with an internal submission of mind and a sincere repentance, it could acquit the offender only in reference to that external law, which exacted obedience to God as a civil prince. In such cases, the Jewish sacrifices, merely as legal observances, operated only to the temporal benefits annexed by the Levitical institution to those expressions of allegiance: but, as genuine and sincere acts of worship and penitence, whenever the piety of the offerer rendered them such, they must likewise have operated to procure that spiritual remission and acceptance, which, antecedent to and independent of the Levitical ordinances, they are found in several parts of Scripture to have been effectual to obtain.

The author of the Scripture account of Sacrifices, (p. 168.) thus reasons upon this subject.—“This people, (the Jews) as to their inward state, were doubtless under the same controul, both of the law of nature and of the divine providence, as they were before the law; this having introduced no change in this respect. They were consequently entitled to the pardon of all their sins, of what nature soever, upon the same terms as before.” And then he goes on to shew, that with the sacrifices of the law, they continued to offer such also as had been customary in the Patriarchal times. And in proof of this, he adduces instances from the law itself, in which such sacrifices are referred to and recognized. They appear manifestly alluded to in the two first chapters of Leviticus, in which the language marks the offering to be of a purely voluntary nature, and merely prescribes the manner in which such an offering was to be made; whereas, when specific legal and moral offences are to be expiated, the law commands the offering, and the specific nature of it. He adduces also the cases of David, and of Eli's house, to shew that Scripture supplies instances of "sacrifices offered out of the occasions prescribed by the law, for averting the divine displeasure upon the occasion of sin." (p. 173.) What this writer justly remarks, concerning sacrifices distinct from those prescribed by the law, I would apply to all; and consider the penitent and devout sentiments of the offerer, as extending the efficacy of the Levitical sacrifice to the full range of those benefits, which before the Levitical institution were conferred on similar genuine acts of worship.

Nor let it be objected to this, that the Apostle has pronounced of the Levitical offerings, that they could not make perfect as pertaining to the conscience. (Hebr. ix. 9. x. 1.) The sacred writer here evidently speaks in comparison. He marks the inferiority of the figure to the substance: and the total insufficiency of the type, considered independently of that from which its entire virtue was derived, to obtain a perfect remission. It might indeed, he argues, by virtue of the positive institution, effect an external and ceremonial purification, but beyond this it could have no power. The blood of bulls and of goats could not, of itself, take away sins. It could not render the mere Mosaic worshipper PERFECT as to conscience. It can have no such operation, but as connected, in the eye of faith, with that more precious blood-shedding, which can purge the conscience from dead works to serve the living God. It could not, says Peirce, on Hebr. ix. 9. “with reference to the conscience, make perfect the worshipper, who only worshipped with meat and drink-offerings and washings, &c.”—In this view of the subject, the remarks contained in this Number, seem no way inconsistent with the language of the Apostle.

One observation more, arising from the passage of the Apostle here referred to, I would wish to offer.—In pointing out the inferiority of the Mosaic to the Christian institution, we find the writer, in the tenth chapter, not only asserting the inefficacy of the Mosaic sacrifice for the full and perfect remission of sins, but taking considerable pains to prove it. Now from this it seems, that the Jews themselves, so far from confining their legal atonements to the mere effect of ceremonial purification, were too prone to attribute to them the virtue of a perfect remission of all moral guilt. Of this there can be no question as to the later Jews. Maimonides expressly says in his treatise, De Pœnit. cap. i. § 2. that “the scape-goat made atonement for all the transgressions of the law, both the lighter and the more heavy transgressions, whether done presumptuously or ignorantly: all are expiated by the scape-goat, if indeed the party repent.” I would remark here, that though Maimonides evidently stretches the virtue of the atonement beyond the limits of the law, (presumptuous sins not admitting of expiation,) yet he seems to have reasoned on a right principle, in attributing to the sincere and pious sentiments of the offerer, the power of extending the efficacy of the atonement to those moral offences, which the legal sin-offering by itself could never reach.

NO. XXXVIII. — ON THE VICARIOUS IMPORT OF THE MOSAIC SACRIFICES.

PAGE 34. (°)—I have, in the page here referred to, used the expression vicarious import, rather than vicarious, to avoid furnishing any colour to the idle charge, made against the doctrine of atonement, of supposing a real substitution in the room of the offender, and a literal translation of his guilt and punishment to the immolated victim; a thing utterly incomprehensible, as neither guilt nor punishment can be conceived, but with reference to consciousness, which cannot be transferred. But to be exposed to suffering, in consequence of another's guilt; and thereby, at the same time to represent to the offender, and to release him from, the punishment due to his transgression, involves no contradiction whatever. In this sense, the suffering of the animal may be conceived a substitute for the punishment of the offender ; inasmuch as it is in virtue of that suffering, the sinner is released. If it be asked, what connexion can subsist between the death of the animal and the acquittal of the sinner, I answer without hesitation, I know not. To unfold divine truths by human philosophy, belongs to those who hold opinions widely different from mine on the subject of atonement. To the Christian it should be sufficient, that Scripture has clearly pronounced this connexion to subsist. That the death of the animal could possess no such intrinsic virtue is manifest ; but that divine appointment could bestow upon it this expiatory power, will not surely be denied : and as to the fact of such appointment, as well as its reference to that great event from which this virtue was derived, the word of revelation furnishes abundant evidence, as I trust appears from the second of the Discourses contained in this volume.

Now, that the offering of the animal slain in sacrifice, may be considered vicarious in the sense here assigned, that is, vicarious in symbol, (or as representing the penal effects of the offerer's demerits, and his release from the deserved punishment in consequence of the death of the victim) — seems to require little proof, beyond the passages of Scripture referred to in the text. If farther evidence should however be required, we shall find it in a more particular examination of that most solemn service of the yearly atonement, described in pp. 61, 62, of this volume. Mean time, it may be worth while to enquire, how far the arguments urged in opposition to the vicarious nature of the Mosaic sacrifices, will operate against this acceptation. And for this purpose, it will be sufficient to examine the objections, as stated by Sykes, and H. Taylor; inasmuch as the industry of the former, and the subtilty of the latter, have left none of the arguments of Socinus, Crellius, or the other learned antagonists of the doctrine of atonement, unnoticed or unimproved; and the skirmishing writers of the present day, have done nothing more than retail, with diminished force, the same objections.

They are all reduced by Sykes and Taylor under the following heads, 1. It is no where said in the Old Testament, that the life of the victim was given as a vicarious substitute for the life of him who offered it. 2. The atonement was not made by the death of the animal, but by the sprinkling of the blood at the altar. 3. No atonement could be made, where life was forfeited. 4. Atonements were made by the sacrifice of animals in some cases where no guilt was involved. And 5. Atonements were sometimes made without the death of an animal, or any blood-shedding whatever.*— This is the sum total of the arguments, collected by the industry of these writers, against the notion of the vicarious nature of sacrifice: and it must be remembered, that Sykes applies these to the idea, that "the taking away the life of the animal was designed to put the offerer in mind of his demerits," no less than to the idea, that "the life of the animal was given in lieu of the life of the sinner;" (pp. 120, 121.) so that they may fairly be replied to, on the principle of atonement here contended for.

* See Sykes's Essay on Sacr. p. 121—141. Ben. Mord. p. 797—799. and Crell. contra Grot. cap. x.

Now, to the first of these objections it may be answered, that it is again and again asserted in the Old Testament, that in cases where punishment had been incurred, and even where (as we shall see hereafter) life itself was forfeited, the due oblation of an animal in sacrifice was effectual to procure, the reversal of the forfeiture, and the pardon of the offender; that is, the death of the animal was so far represented as standing in place of the offender's punishment, and in some cases even of his death, that through it, no matter how operating, the offerer was enabled to escape. This however is not deemed sufficient. Some precise and appropriate phrase, unequivocally marking a strict vicarious substitution, is still required. But as a strict vicarious substitution, or literal equivalent, is not contended for, no such notion belonging to the doctrine of atonement, it is not necessary that any such phrase should be produced. The words, כִּפֶּר, and נָשָׂא, in their sacrificial application, sufficiently admit the vicarious import; and the description of the sacrificial ceremony and its consequences, especially in the instance of the scape-goat, positively prove it; and beyond this nothing farther can be required.

But it is curious to remark, that both Sykes and Taylor, in their eagerness to demonstrate, that the sacrificial terms conveyed nothing whatever of a vicarious import, have urged an objection, which rebounds with decisive force against their own opinion. "The life of the animal," say they, "is never called, in the Old Testament, a ransom; nor is there any such expression, as λυτρον, αντιλυτρον, αντιψυχον, equivalent, exchange, substitute, &c." Essay on Sacr. p. 134. B. Mord. p. 197.—Now, not to speak of their criticisms on the expressions in the original, (particularly on the word כִּפָּר,) which merely go to prove, that these words do not necessarily convey such ideas, inasmuch as being of a more extended signification, they are not in all cases applied exactly in this sense:—an argument, which will easily strip most Hebrew terms of their true and definite meaning, being, as they are denominated by Grotius, (De Satis. Chr. cap. viii. § 2, 3.) πολυσημοι—not to speak, I say, of such criticisms, nor to urge the unfairness of concluding against the meaning of the original, from the language used in the Greek translation; have not these writers, by admitting, that the words λυτρον, αντιλυτρον, &c.

if applied to the Mosaic sacrifices, would have conveyed the idea of vicarious substitution, thereby established the force of these expressions, when applied in the New Testament to the death of Christ, (Mat. xx. 28. Mark x. 46. 1 Tim. ii. 6.) which being expressly said to be a sacrifice for the sins of men, and being that true and substantial sacrifice, which those of the law but faintly and imperfectly represented, consequently reflects back upon them its attributes and qualities, though in an inferior degree.

Again, secondly, it is contended, that the atonement was not made by the death of the animal, but by the sprinkling of the blood.—True; and by this very sprinkling of the blood before the altar, it was, that according to the prescribed rites of sacrifice, the life of the animal was offered; as appears from the express letter of the law, which declares the life to be in the blood, and subjoins as a consequence from this, that it is the blood, (the vehicle of life, or, as it is called a few verses after, the life itself) that maketh an atonement for the soul, or life, of the offerer. See Ainsworth, and Patrick, on Levit. xvii. 11. and for the concurrent opinions of all the Jewish doctors on this head, see Outram De Sacrif. lib. i. cap. xxii. § 11.—The rendering of the above verse of Leviticus in the Old Italic version is remarkable: Anima enim omnis carnis sanguis ejus est: et ego dedi eum vobis, exorare pro animabus vestris; sanguis enim ejus pro anima exorabit. Sabatier. Vet. Ital. And even Dr. Geddes's translation is decidedly in favour of the sense, in which the passage has been applied in this Number. "For the life of all flesh being in the blood, it is my will, that by it an atonement shall be made, at the altar, for your lives."

But thirdly, the sacrifice could not have implied any thing vicarious, as no atonement could be made where life was forfeited.—There is no argument advanced by the opponents of the doctrine of atonement, with greater confidence than this; and there is none which abounds with greater fallacies. It is untrue, in point of fact: it is sophistical, in point of reasoning: and it is impertinent, in point of application.

1. It is untrue; for atonements were made in cases, where without atonement life was forfeited. This appears, at once, from the passage of Levit. last referred to; which positively asserts the atonement to be made for the life of the offerer: it also appears from the unbending rigour of the law in general, which seems to have denounced death against every violation of it, (see Deut. xxvii. 26. Ezech. xviii. 19—23. Gal. iii. 10. James ii. 10.) and in particular, from the specific cases, of perjury, (Levit. vi. 3.) and of profane swearing, (v. 4.) for which atonements were appointed, notwithstanding the strict sentence of the law was death (Exod. xx. 7.—and Levit. xxiv. 16.)—

see on this Grot. De Satisf. cap. x. § 3. Hallet's Notes and Disc. p. 275—278. and Richie's Pecul. Doct. vol. i. p. 245—249. 280. This latter writer, it is to be observed, though opposing the doctrine of vicarious suffering, and wishing to avail himself of the objection here urged, yet finds himself not at liberty to advance farther than to state, that it seldom happened that death was denounced against any offences, for which atonement was appointed.

2. It is sophistical ; for from the circumstance of atonement not being appointed in those cases in which death was peremptorily denounced, it is inferred, that no atonement could be made where life was forfeited ; whereas the true statement of the proposition evidently is, that life was forfeited where no atonement was permitted to be made. It is true indeed, that death is not expressly denounced, in those cases, in which atonements were allowed ; but this was because the atonement was permitted to arrest the sentence of the law, as appears particularly from this, that where the prescribed atonement was not made, the law, no longer suspended in its natural operation, pronounced the sentence of death. The real nature of the case seems to be this : the rigid tendency of the law being to secure obedience, on pain of forfeiture of life ; all such offences, as were of so aggravated a kind as to preclude forgiveness, were left under the original sentence of the law, whilst such as were attended with circumstances of mitigation, were forgiven on the condition of a public and humble acknowledgment of the offence, by complying with certain prescribed modes of atonement. It should be remembered also, that the law was not given at different times, so as that its denunciations and atonements should be promulgated at different periods; both were announced at the same time, and therefore in such cases as admitted of pardon, the penalty being superseded by the atonement, the punishment strictly due to the offence is consequently not denounced, and can only be collected now from the general tendency of the law, from some collateral bearings of the Mosaic code, or from the inflictions which actually followed on the neglect of the atonement. The whole strength of the present objection rests then upon this: that we have not both the atonement prescribed, and the punishment denounced: that is, the punishment both remitted, and denounced, at the same time.

But I have dwelt too long upon this; especially when, 3dly, the whole argument is inapplicable. For even they who hold the doctrine of a vicarious punishment, feel it not necessary to contend, that the evil inflicted on the victim, should be exactly the same in quality and degree, with that denounced against the offender: it depending, they say, upon the will of the legislator, what satisfaction he will accept in place of the punishment of the offender, see Outram De Sacr. lib. i. cap. xxi. § 1. 2. 9. But still less will this argument apply, where vicarious punishment is not contended for, but merely an emblematic substitute, the result of institution, and which in no respect involves the notion of an equivalent.

Fourthly, The atonement by animal sacrifice, in cases not involving moral guilt, can only prove, that there were sacrifices which were not vicarious, inasmuch as there were some that were not for sin: but it by no means follows, that where moral guilt was involved, the sacrifice was not vicarious. Now it is only in this latter case, the notion of a vicarious sacrifice is contended for, or is indeed conceivable. And accordingly, it is only in such cases, we find those ceremonies used, which mark the vicarious import of the sacrifice. The symbolical translation of sins, and the consequent pollution of the victim, are confined to those sacrifices which were offered confessedly in expiation of sins, the most eminent of which were those offered on the day of expiation, and those for the High Priest, and for the entire congregation, (Lev. xvi. 15—28. iv. 3—12. and 13—22.) in all of which, the pollution caused by the symbolical transfer of sins, is expressed by the burning of the victim without the camp: see Outr. De Sacr. lib. i. cap. xvii. § 1, 2. Thus it appears, that the very mode of sacrifice, as well as the occasion of its being offered, clearly ascertained the case of its vicarious import.

But it deserves to be considered, whether even the cases of the puerpera, the leper, and the Nazirite, on which, as they seem to imply nothing of crime, Sykes and other writers of that class lay so much stress, do not bear such a relation to sin, as to justify the oblation of the animal sacrifice in the view here contended for. It deserves to be considered, whether the pains of childbearing, and all diseases of the human body, (of which leprosy in the Eastern countries was deemed the most grievous,) being the signal consequences of that apostacy, which had entailed these calamities on the children of Adam, it might not be proper on occasion of a deliverance from these remarkable effects of sin, that there should be this sensible representation of that death, which was the desert of it in general, and an humble acknowledgment of that personal demerit, which had actually exposed the offerer on so many occasions to the severest punishment. That this was the notion entertained by the Jewish doctors, with the additional circumstance of the imputation of actual crime, in these cases of human suffering, has been already shewn, pp. 268, 269.—see also Vitringa on Isai. liii. 4. There seems likewise good ground to think, that the idea of distempers, as penal inflictions for sins, was prevalent in the earliest ages even among the heathen, see Harris's Comment. on the liiid. ch. of Isai. p. 235, also Martini, as quoted by Rosenm. Schol. in Jesai. p. 909. The case of the Nazirite, it must be confessed, seems more difficult to be reconciled to the principle here laid down. And yet, if with Lightfoot (Hor. Hebr. in Luc. i. 15.) it be admitted, that "the law of the Nazirites had a reference to Adam, while under the prohibition in his state of innocence," and that it was "designed in commemoration of the state of innocence before the fall," (an idea for which he finds strong support in the traditions of the Jews) it may seem not unreasonable to conclude, that the sacrifice offered by the Nazirite polluted by the DEAD, was intended to commemorate that death, which was the consequence of Adam's fall from innocence, and which was now become the desert of sinful man. And thus the case of the Nazirite, as well as those of the puerpera and the leper, seems sufficiently reducible to the notion of sacrifice here laid down. But let this be as it may, it is clear, that to prove that a sacrifice may be vicarious, it is not necessary to shew that every sacrifice is so: no more than, for the purpose of proving that there are sacrifices for sins, it is necessary to shew that every sacrifice is of that nature.

We come now to the fifth, and last, objection; in which it is urged, that atonements for sin being made in some cases without any animal sacrifice, but merely by an offering of flour; by piacular sacrifice it could never be intended to imply the vicarious substitution of a life. To this the answer is obvious, that although no vicarious substitution of a life could be conceived, where life was not given at all: yet from this it cannot follow, that where a life was given, it might not admit a vicarious import. It should be remembered, that the case here alluded to was a case of necessity; and that this offering of flour was accepted, only where the offerer was so poor, that he could not by any possibility procure an animal for sacrifice. Can then any thing be inferred from a case, such as this, in which the offerer must have been altogether precluded from engaging in any form of worship, and shut out from all legal communion with his God, or indulged in this inferior sort of offering? Besides is it not natural to conceive, that this offering of flour being indulged to the poor man, in the place of the animal sacrifice which, had he been able, he was bound to offer, he should consider it but as a substitute for the animal sacrifice? And that being burnt and destroyed upon the altar, he might naturally conceive of it, as a symbol and representation of that destruction, due to his own demerits? And to all this it may be added, that this individual might be taught to look to the animal sacrifices, offered for all the sins of all the people on the day of atonement, for the full and complete consummation of those less perfect atonements, which alone he had been able to make.

These constitute the sum total of the arguments, which have been urged against the vicarious nature of the legal piacular atonements. How far they are conclusive against the notion of their vicarious import here contended for, it is not difficult to judge. It deserves to be noted, that in the examination of these arguments, I have allowed them the full benefit of the advantage, which their authors have artfully sought for them; namely, that of appreciating their value, as applied to the sacrifices of the law considered independently of that great sacrifice, which these were but intended to prefigure, and from which alone they derived whatever virtue they possessed. When we come hereafter to consider them, as connected with that event in which their true significancy lay, we shall find the observations which have been here made acquiring a tenfold strength.

What the opinions of the Jewish writers are upon the subject of this Number, has been already explained in Number XXXIII. Whoever wishes for a more extensive review of the testimonies which they supply, on the three points, —of the translation of the offerer's sins, the consequent pollution of the animal, and the redemption of the sinner by the substitution of the victim,—may consult Outram De Sacrif. lib. i. cap. xxii. § 4—12.

NO. XXXIX.——ON THE IMPOSITION OF HANDS
UPON THE HEAD OF THE VICTIM.

PAGE 34. (P)—The ceremony of the imposition of hands upon the head of the victim, has been usually considered, in the case of piacular sacrifices, as a symbolical translation of the sins of the offender upon the head of the sacrifice; and as a mode of deprecating the evil due to his transgressions. So we find it represented by Abarbinel, in the introduction to his commentary on Leviticus, (De Viel. p. 301.): and so the ceremony of the Scape Goat in Lev. xvi. 21. seems directly to assert. And it is certain, that the practice of imprecating on the head of the victim, the evils which the sacrificer wished to avert from himself, was usual amongst the heathen, as appears particularly from Herodotus, (lib. ii. cap. 39.) who relates this of the Egyptians, and at the same time asserts that no Egyptian would so much as “taste the head of any animal,” but under the influence of this religious custom flung it into the river. This interpretation of the ceremony of the imposition of hands, in the Mosaic sacrifice, is however strongly contested by certain writers, particularly by Sykes, (Essay on Sacrif. p. 25—50) and the author of the Scripture Account of Sacrifices, (Append. p. 10.) who contend, that this ceremony was not confined to piacular sacrifices, but was also used in those which were eucharistical, “in which, commemoration was made, not of sins, but of mercies:” it was not therefore, say they, always accompanied with confession of sins, but with praise, or thanksgiving, or in short such concomitant as suited the nature and intention of the particular sacrifice. But in order to prove, that it was not attended with acknowledgment of sin, in sacrifices not piacular, it is necessary to shew, that in none but piacular was there any reference whatever to sin. In these indeed, the pardon of sin is the appropriate object; but that in our expressions of praise and thanksgiving, acknowledgment should be made of our own unworthiness, and of the general desert of sin, seems not unreasonable. That even the eucharistic sacrifices, then, might bear some relation to sin, especially if animal sacrifice in its first institution was designed to represent that death which had been introduced by sin, will perhaps not be deemed improbable. And in confirmation of this, it is certain, that the Jewish doctors combine, in all cases, confession of sins with imposition of hands. "Where there is no confession of sins," say they, "there is no imposition of hands." See Outram De Sacr. lib. i. cap. xv. § 8.

But, be this as it may, it is at all events clear, that if the ceremony be admitted to have had, in each kind of sacrifice, the signification suited to its peculiar nature and intention; it necessarily follows, that when used in piacular sacrifices, it implied a reference to, and acknowledgment of, sin: confession of sins being always undoubtedly connected with piacular sacrifices, as appears from Levit. v. 5. xvi. 21. and Numb. v. 7. The particular forms of confession, used in the different kinds of piacular sacrifice, are also handed down to us by the Jewish writers; and are given by Outram (De Sacr. lib. i. cap. xv. § 10, 11.) The form prescribed for the individual, presenting his own sacrifice, seems particularly significant, "O God, I have sinned, I have done perversely, I have trespassed before thee, and have done so and so. Lo! now I repent, and am truly sorry for my misdeeds. Let then this victim be my expiation." Which last words were accompanied by the action, of laying hands on the head of the victim; and were considered by the Jews, as we have seen from several authorities, in pp. 261, 262, to be equivalent to this; "let the evils, which in justice should have fallen on my head, light upon the head of this victim. See Outram. De Sacr. lib. i. cap. xxii. § 5, 6. 9.

Now that this imposition of hands, joined to the confession of sins, was intended symbolically to transfer the sins of the offerer, on the head of the victim; and consequently to point it out as the substitute for the offender, and as the accepted medium of expiation; will appear from the bare recital of the ceremony, as prescribed on the day of expiation. Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, PUTTING THEM UPON THE HEAD of the goat—and the goat shall BEAR UPON HIM ALL THEIR INIQUITIES,” &c. (Levit. xvi. 21, 22.) The sins of the people being thus transferred to the animal, it is afterwards represented to be so polluted, as to pollute the person, that carried it away; (Lev. xvi. 26.) and by the entire ceremony, expiation is made for the sins of the people. Now it is to be remarked, that this is the only passage in the entire Scripture, in which the meaning of the ceremony, of laying hands on the head of the victim, is directly explained: and from this, one would naturally think, there could be no difficulty in understanding its true import in all other cases of piacular sacrifice.

But the ingenuity of the writers above mentioned, is not to be silenced so easily. The goat, says Dr. Sykes, (Essay, p. 37.) was so polluted, that it was not sacrificed, but sent away: "it was not, then, to transfer sins upon the sacrifice, that hands were laid upon the head of the victim: as men would not offer unto God, what they know to be polluted." In this notion, of the pollution of the scape-goat rendering it unfit to be offered in sacrifice, H. Taylor concurs with Sykes. (Ben. Mord. pp. 827, 828.)

Now to the objection here urged it may be answered, 1. that the scape-goat was actually a part of the sin-offering for the people, as is shewn more particularly in page 62, and Number LXXI; and as is confessed by the author of the Scripture Account of Sacrifices, (Append. p. 12.) who agrees with Sykes in the main part of his objection; and as may be directly collected from Levit. xvi. 5. 10. in which the two goats are called a sin-offering, and the scape-goat described as presented before the Lord, to make an atonement with him. See Patrick on these verses.

Secondly, Admitting even the scape-goat to have been entirely distinct from the sin-offering; since the same ceremony, which is allowed by Sykes and H. Taylor to be a proof that the scape-goat was polluted by the translation of the people's sins; namely, the person, who carried it away being obliged to wash, before he was again admitted into the camp; since, I say, this same ceremony was prescribed with respect to the bullock, and the goat, which had been sacrificed as sin-offerings; it follows, that they likewise were polluted; and that therefore, there was a translation of sins to the animals, that were actually sacrificed in expiation of those sins. Now this translation being accompanied with, is also to be considered as expressed by, the imposition of hands; a ceremony, which it was the less necessary specially to prescribe here, as this was already enjoined for all cases of peculiar sacrifice, in Lev. ch. iv.—and that this ceremony did take place, we can have no doubt, not only from this general direction in the 4th chapter, but also from the express testimonies of the Jewish writers on this head, (Ainsw. on Levit. xvi. 6. 11.) and from the description in 2 Chr. xxix. 23. of the sacrifice offered by Hezekiah, to make an atonement for all Israel.—They brought forth the he-goats for the sin-offering, before the king and the congregation, and they LAID THEIR HANDS UPON THEM—and the priests killed them, &c.

Thirdly, The entire of the notion, that what was polluted (as it is symbolically called) by sin, could not be offered to God, is founded in a mistake, arising from the not distinguishing between the natural* impurities and blemishes of the animal, (which with good reason unfitted it for a sincere and respectful expression of devotion,) and that emblematical defilement, which arose out of the very act of worship, and existed but in the imagination of the worshipper. It should be remarked also, that this notion of the defilement of the victim by the transfer of the offerer's sins, so far from being inconsistent with the Mosaic precepts, concerning the pure and unblemished state of the animal chosen for sacrifice, (Ex. xii. 5. Lev. xxii. 21. Num. xix. 2. Mal. i. 14, &c.) as is urged by Sykes and H. Taylor, and by Dr. Priestley, (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 213.) seems absolutely to require and presuppose this purity, the more clearly to convey the idea, that the pollution was the sole result of the translated defilement of the sinner. In like manner we are told in the New Testament, that Christ was made a curse, and also sin (or a sin-offering) for us; whilst to make it more clear, that all this was the effect of our sin, it is added that he knew no sin himself. And indeed they who consider the pollution of the victim as naturally irreconcilable with the notion of a sacrifice, as Doctor Priestley evidently does, would do well to attend to the καθαρματα of the antients, who, whilst they required for their gods the τελεια θυσια, the most perfect animals for sacrifice, (see Potter on the Religion of Greece, ch. iv. and Outr. De Sacr. lib. i. cap. ix. § 3.) at the same time sought to appease them, by offering up human victims whom they had first loaded with imprecations, and whom they in consequence deemed so polluted with the sins of those, for whom they were to be offered, that the word καθαρμα became synonymous to what was most execrable and impure, and with the Latins was rendered by the word SCELUS, as if to mark the very extreme and essence of what was sinful. See Stephanus on καθαρμα, and Suidas on the words καθαρμα and περιψημα.

* The word in the original used to denote the perfect state of the animals to be offered in sacrifice is כִּמְעָה, which Rosenm. explains by “perfectum, i. e. sine vitio et defectu corporis, sine ægritudine et membrorum debilitate; id quod Græc. αμωμον, quod Alexandrini hic habent.” Josephus (Antiq. Lib. III. cap. x.) calls these animals ολοκληρα και κατα μηδεν λελωβημενα, entire and without blemish. Herodotus also (Lib. II. cap. xlii.) testifies that the animals offered by the Egyptians were of the like description: της καθαρως αργιας των βουν και της μοσχως οι παντες Αιγυπτιοι θυεσι.

It must be confessed, indeed, that the author of the Scrip. Account of Sacr. has gone upon grounds entirely different from the above named authors. He positively denies, that either the scape-goat, or the bullock, incurred any pollution whatever; and maintains, that the washing of the persons who carried them away, indicated no pollution of the victims, inasmuch as the same washing was prescribed in cases of holiness, not of pollution. (App. p. 11.) But, besides that this author is singular in his notion that the scape-goat was not polluted, he proceeds altogether upon a wrong acceptation of those passages, which relate to persons and things that came into contact with the sin-offering; it being commonly translated, in Lev. vi. 18, and elsewhere, he that toucheth them (the sin-offerings) shall be HOLY, whereas it should be rendered, as Wall properly observes, in quite a contrary sense, shall be SANCTIFIED, OR CLEANSED, shall be under an obligation, or necessity, of cleansing himself, as the LXX understand it, αγιασθησεται. See Wall's Critical Notes, Lev. vi. 18. where this point is most satisfactorily treated.

Upon the whole then, there appears no reasonable objection against the idea, that the imposition of hands, in piacular sacrifices, denoted an emblematical transfer of *guilt; and that the

* Dr. Geddes's authority, when it happens to be on the side of orthodoxy, is not without its weight: because having no very strong bias in that direction there remains only the vis veri to account for his having taken it. I therefore willingly accept his assistance on this subject of the imposition of hands upon the head of the victim. He renders Levit. i. 4. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the victim, that it may be an acceptable atonement for him. And on the words, lay his hand, &c. he subjoins this remark—“ Thereby devoting it to God: and TRANSFERRING, as it were, HIS OWN GUILT UPON THE VICTIM.” A mere typical ceremony consequently implied the desire, that the evil due to the sinner might be averted, by what was to fall on the head of the victim. This receives farther confirmation, from the consideration of other parts of Scripture, in which this ceremony of imposition of hands was used without any reference to sacrifice. In Levit. xxiv. 14, 15. we find this action prescribed in the case of the blasphemer, before he was put to death; it being at the same time added, that whosoever curseth his God, shall bear his sin: thus as it were expressing by this significant action, that the evil consequences of his sin should fall upon his head: and in these words, Maimonides expressly says, the blasphemer was marked out for punishment, by those who laid their hands upon his head, “thy blood be upon thine own head,” (see Outram. De Sacr. lib. i. cap. xv. § 8.) “as if to say, the punishment of this sin fall upon thyself, and not on us and the rest of the people.” The expressions also in Joshua ii. 19. 2 Sam. i. 16. Esth. ix. 25. Ps. vii. 16. and several other pas-rite, (he adds,) derived, probably, from the legal custom of the accusing witness laying his hand upon the head of the criminal. As to Dr. Geddes’s mode of explaining the matter I am indifferent. Valcat quantum. His admission of the emblematical transfer of guilt upon the victim I am perfectly contented with: and indeed his illustration, by the witness pointing out the object with whom the guilt lay, does not tend much to weaken the significancy of the action.

sages of the Old Testament, respecting evils falling upon the head of the person to suffer, may give still farther strength to these observations.

It deserves to be remarked, that the sacrifice referred to in the passage cited in the text, was that of a burnt offering, or holocaust; and as the language in which it is spoken of, as being accepted for the offerer, to make atonement for him, obviously falls in with the interpretation here given of the ceremony of laying hands on the head of the victim, it appears, that it was not only in the case of the sin-offering enjoined by the law, that this action was connected with an acknowledgment of sin, but with respect also to that kind of sacrifice, which existed before the law; and which, as not arising out of the law, is accordingly not now prescribed; but spoken of in the very opening of the sacrificial code, as already in familiar use, and offered at the will of the individual; If any man bring an offering—a burnt sacrifice, &c.—That the burnt-sacrifice was offered in expiation of sins has indeed been doubted, but so strongly is the reference to sin marked in the description of this sacrifice, that Dr. Priestley, on the supposition of its being a voluntary offering, feels himself compelled even to admit it as a consequence, “that in every sacrifice the offerer was considered as a sinner, and that the sacrifice had respect to him in that character” (Theol. Rep. vol. i. pp. 204, 205.)—a conclusion, so directly subversive of his notion of sacrifices as mere gifts, that in order to escape from it, he is obliged to deny, in opposition to every commentator, that the burnt-sacrifice here spoken of was a voluntary offering. Now, that the word, לרצונו, should not be translated, as it is in our common version, of his own voluntary will, I admit with Dr. Priestley. It should be rendered, as appears from the use of the word immediately after, and in other parts of Scripture, as well as from the Greek, the Chaldee, the Syriac and the Arabic versions, for his acceptance.* See Houbig. Ainsw. and Purver. But the present version of this word is far from being the strength of the cause. The manner in which the subject is introduced, and the entire of the context, place it beyond doubt, that the sacrifice spoken of, was the voluntary burnt-offering of an individual. And thus Dr. Priestley's argument holds good against himself, and he admits that in every sacrifice there was a reference to sin. On the expiatory nature of the burnt-offering, we shall see more hereafter, in Number LXVII.

* The words, לרצונו לפני יהוה, Rosenm. renders, ut acceptus sit Deo, Dei favorem sibi conciliet. Levit. i. 3.

NO. XL.—ON THE SUFFICIENCY OF THE PROOF OF THE PROPITIATORY NATURE OF THE MOSAIC SACRIFICES, INDEPENDENT OF THE ARGUMENT WHICH ESTABLISHES THEIR VICARIOUS IM-PORT.

PAGE 34. (9)—That the Jewish sacrifices were propitiatory, or in other words, that in consequence of the sacrifice of the animal, and in virtue of it either immediately or remotely, the pardon of the offender was procured, is all that my argument requires, in the place referred to by the present Number. The vicarious import of the sacrifice seems indeed sufficiently established by shewing, as has been done, that the sins of the offender were transferred in symbol to the victim, and immediately after, expiated by the death of the animal, to which they had been so transferred. But this has been an argument ex abundanti; and has been introduced, rather for the purpose of evincing the futility of the objections so confidently relied on, than as essential to the present enquiry. The effect of propitiation is all that the argument absolutely demands. For further discussion of this important subject, I refer the reader to Number XLII.

NO. XLI.—ON THE DIVINE INSTITUTION OF SACRIFICE: AND THE TRACES THEREOF DISCOVERABLE IN THE HEATHEN CORRUPTIONS OF THE RITE.

PAGE 35. (^s) That the rite of sacrifice was not an invention of man, but an ordinance of God; that, however in passing among the nations of the earth, it might have become deformed by idolatrous practices, it yet had not sprung from an idolatrous source,—it is the principal object, of the second of the Discourses contained in this volume, and of many of the Dissertations which are to follow in the next, to establish.* I shall not there-

* Dr. Randolph in his interesting and valuable volume of Advent Sermons, has expressed himself with felicity upon this subject.—“From those who presumptuously deride the doctrine of Atonement, we would ask some reasonable solution of the origin of sacrifice. Will they make it consistent with any natural idea, will they discover in the blood of an innocent victim, any thing recommendatory in itself of the offerer’s suit and devotions? Though they should clear away, what they term, a load of superstition from the Christian worship, they will find it encumbering every altar of their favourite natural religion; they will find these absurdities forming the significant and generally indispensable part of all religious ceremonies: and however disgraced, as we are ready to allow, with every abominable pollution, though retaining nothing to perfect the service, or to purify fore here enter upon a discussion of this question, but confine myself merely to a few extracts from Eusebius, with some accompanying observations, upon this subject.

That learned writer having deduced from the scripture account of the sacrifices of Abel, Noah, and Abraham, and from the sacrificial institutions by Moses, the fact of a divine appointment, proceeds to explain the nature and true intent of the rite in the following manner.—“ Whilst men had no victim that was more excellent, more precious, and more worthy of God, animals were made the price and ransom* of their souls. And their substituting these animals in their own room bore indeed some affinity to their suffering themselves; in which sense all the antient worshippers and friends of God, made use of them. The holy spirit had taught them, that there should one day come a VICTIM, more venerable, more holy, and more worthy of God. He had likewise instructed them how to point him out to the world by types and shadows. And thus they became prophets, and were not ignorant of their having been cho-

the offering, still in its expiatory form, in its propitiatory hopes, the sacrifice of heathen nations preserves the features of that sacred and solemn office, which was ordained to keep up the remembrance of guilt, till the full and perfect sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction was made by an eternal Mediator, for the sins of the whole world.” Sermons during Advent. pp. 46, 47.

* “ Διὸ τῆς ἐαυτῶν ζωῆς, καὶ ἀντιψυχᾶ.”

sen out to represent to mankind, the things which God resolved to accomplish.”*—In other words he pronounces, that the ancient sacrifices, those prescribed to the patriarchs, and those enjoined by the law, were types and figures, and known to be such, of that one great sacrifice, which was, at a future day, to be offered upon the cross for the sins of the whole human race.

Of the practices which grew out of this original institution, and of the abuses to which it led amongst the heathen world, perhaps the most remarkable may be discovered in the account of the mystical offering of the Phenicians recorded by the same writer from Sanchoniatho; which, as well from the extraordinary circumstances of the transaction itself, as from the interesting and important bearing given to it by a late ingenious writer, I here submit to the reader in the words of the historian.

† “It was an established custom amongst the antients” (speaking of the Phenicians,) “on any

* Euseb. Demonst. Evang. lib. I. cap. x. p. 36. The whole of the tenth chapter is well worth attention.

† Ἐθος ἦν τοῖς παλαιοῖς ἐν ταῖς μεγάλαις συμφοραῖς τῶν κινδύων, ἀντὶ τῆς παντῶν φθοράς, τὸ ἠγαπημένον τῶν τέκνων τῆς κρατεντῆς ἢ πολέως, ἢ ἐδνῆς, εἰς σφαγὴν ἐπιδίδοναι, λυτρὸν τοῖς τιμωροῖς δαίμοσι. Κατεσφαττοῦτο δὲ οἱ δίδομενοι ΜΥΣΤΙΚΩΣ. — Κροῖος τοῖνυν, ἐν οἱ Φοινίκης Ἰσραὴλ προσαγορευεῖσσι, βασιλευὼν τῆς χώρας, καὶ ὑπερον μετὰ τὴν τε βίβη τελευτῆν εἰς τὸν τε Κροῖον ἀγερα καθιερωθεῖς, ἐξ ἐπιχωρίας θυμφῆς, Ἀνωβρετ λεγομένης, υἱὸν ἔχων μονογείῃ, οἱ δια τῆς Ἰσραὴ calamitous or dangerous emergency, for the ruler of the state, to offer up, in prevention of the general ruin, the most dearly beloved of his children, as a ransom to avert the divine vengeance. And εκαλου, (τε μονογενης υτως ετι και νυν καλημενε παρα τοις Φοινιξι) κινδυνων εκ πολεμου μεγαλω κατειληφοτων την χωραν, βασιλικω κοσμησας σχηματι τον υιον, ζωμον τε κατασκευασαμενος κατεδυσεν. Euseb. Prap. Evang. Lib. I. cap. x. p. 40. and Lib. IV. cap. xvi. pp. 156, 157.

It will be remarked here that the word Ισραηλ, in this extract of Eusebius, I have written Il in the translation.—This I have done upon the authority of the ablest critics. Grotius, Vossius, and others, are of opinion, that the transcriber of Eusebius meeting with יל (Il) supposed it to be a contraction of the word Ισραηλ, (Israel) often abridged thus in the MSS. of the Greek Christian writers, and wrote it at full length as we now find it. This is confirmed by the circumstance of Kronus being elsewhere called Il, as we learn from Eusebius himself, (pp. 36, 37.)—On this see Grotius in Deut. xviii. 10. Vossius de Idol. lib. I. cap. xviii. p. 143. Marsham Can. Chron. p. 79. and Bryant's Observat. on Hist. p. 288. The last named writer says, “Kronus originally esteemed the supreme deity, as is manifest from his being called Il and Ilus. It was the same name as the El of the Hebrews; and according to St. Jerome was one of the ten names of God. Phœnicibus Il, qui Hebræis El, quod est unum de decem nominibus Dei. Damascius, in the life of Isidorus, as it occurs in Photius, mentions that Kronus was worshipped by the people of those parts, under the name of El. Φοινικες και Συροι τον Κρονον Ηλ, και Βηλ, και Βολαθην επονομαζουσι.” Observations, &c. p. 289.—It should be observed that the לם (El) of the Hebrews is written לם (Il) in Syriac; and consequently is the Il of the Phœnicians: so that Il and El are without doubt the same name.

they who were devoted for this purpose, were offered mystically. For Kronus truly, whom the Phenicians call Il, and who after his death was translated with divine honours to the star which bears his name, having, whilst he ruled over that people, begotten by a nymph of the country, named Anobret, an only son, thence entitled Jeud, (it being to this day usual with the Phenicians so to denominate an only son,) had, when the nation was endangered from a most perilous war, after dressing up his son in the emblems of royalty, offered him as a sacrifice on an altar specially prepared for the purpose."

On the Phenician rites, and particularly upon their mystical offering here described, the late very learned Mr. Bryant has offered some curious and striking observations, from which I have made the following selection, which I trust will not be unacceptable to the reader.

It should not, however, be dissembled, that Stillingfleet, (after Scaliger and others) is of opinion, that the word might have been written Israel by Eusebius, as we now find it, and that by that Abraham might have been intended. (Orig. Sacr. p. 371.) He has not, however, advanced any thing to place this matter beyond doubt. And the authority of Eusebius himself as already given, with the other references that have been noticed, renders it highly probable that Il was the word as originally written. Vossius also (p. 143) remarks, "Parum credibile est, Phœnices pro Deo summo, hoc est Molocho, sive Saturno, habituros Israelem, parentem gentis vicinæ, maximeque exosæ; quod satis sacra testatur historia."

After speaking of the sacrifices customary with various nations, especially their human sacrifices, he goes on to say,—“ These nations had certainly a notion of a federal and an expiatory sacrifice. It was derived to them by tradition; and though originally founded in truth, yet being by degrees darkened and misapplied, it gave rise to the worst of profanations, and was the source of the basest and most unnatural cruelty. I have shewn at large that human victims were very common among the Phenicians: and Philo Byblius tells us from Sanchoniatho, that in some of their sacrifices there was a particular mystery: ‘ they who were devoted for this purpose, were offered mystically:’ that is, under a mystical representation: and he proceeds to inform us, that it was in consequence of an example which had been set this people by the God Kronus, who in a time of distress offered up his only son to his father Ouranus.” *—He observes, that there is something in the account so very extraordinary as to deserve most particular attention; and after quoting the passage from Eusebius, which I have given at full length in page 381, he remarks, that “ if nothing more be meant by it, than that a king of the country sacrificed his son, and that the people afterwards copied his example, it supplies a cruel precedent too blindly followed, but contains nothing in it of a mystery." "When a fact" (he adds) "is supposed to have a mystical reference, there should be something more than a bare imitation. Whatever may have been alluded to under this typical representation, it was, I believe, but imperfectly understood by the Phenicians; and is derived to us still more obscurely, by being transmitted through a *secondary channel."

* It is to be noted that Eusebius has given this account of the matter, in a passage different from that, which I have already quoted from him. Δοιμὲ δὲ γενομένη, καὶ φθορᾶς, τὸν εαυτὲ μοιολογῆ υἱὸν Κρόνου Οὐρανῷ πατρὶ ολοκαυστοί. Præp. Evang. p. 38.

Our author, having cleared the history from some obscurities and apparent contradictions, proceeds to his final result.—"This is the only instance of any sacrifice in the Gentile world, which is said to be mystical; and it was attended with circumstances which are very extraordinary. Kronus, we find, was the same with El, and Elioun: and he is termed $\Upsilon\psi\iota\sigma\omicron\varsigma$, and $\Upsilon\psi\epsilon\rho\alpha\nu\iota\omicron\varsigma$. He is moreover said to have the Elohim for his coadjutors: $\Sigma\upsilon\mu\mu\alpha\chi\omicron\iota\ \text{I}\lambda\epsilon\ \tau\epsilon\ \text{K}\rho\omicron\nu\epsilon\ \text{E}\lambda\omega\epsilon\iota\mu\ \epsilon\pi\epsilon\kappa\lambda\eta\theta\eta\sigma\alpha\nu$.

* Bryant here alludes to the circumstance of our not being possessed of Sanchoniatho's history itself, but merely of a fragment of a Greek translation of it by Philo Byblius, handed down to us by Eusebius; who, as well as the translator, appear to have mixed with the original some observations of their own. On this fragment of Sanchoniatho, see Goguet's Orig. of Laws, vol. i. p. 370—384: Banier's Mythology, &c. vol. i. p. 88—102: and particularly Boch. Phaleg. (Opera. tom. i. p. 771—777.)

(Præp. Evang. p. 37.) He had no † father to make any offering to; for he was the father of all, and termed Κυριος Ουρανυς, by the confession of the author, by whom the account is given. These sacrifices, therefore, had no reference to any thing past, but alluded to a great event to be accomplished afterwards. They were instituted, probably, in consequence of a prophetic tradition, which, I imagine, had been preserved in the family of Esau, and transmitted through his posterity to the people of Canaan. The account is mixed with much extraneous matter, but, divesting it of fable, we may arrive at the truth which is concealed beneath. The mystical sacrifice of the Phenicians had these requisites; that a prince

* This seems a direct contradiction to what has been just before quoted from Eusebius. Bryant, however, explains this by shewing, that, in truth, Ouranus, the father, to whom Kronus is said to have offered up his only son, is the same as El, or Elioun, or Kronus, being only another title for the same person. This also he asserts to be the same with the Ηλιος of the Greeks, and refers to Servius in Virg. Æneid. Lib. I. de Belo Phœnice, “Omnes in illis partibus Solem colunt, qui ipsorum linguâ ΗΕΛ dicitur.” Bryant’s Observ. &c. p. 290.—Servius adds to this quotation from him by Bryant what deserves to be noticed: “unde” (ex ΗΕΛ scil.) “et Ηλιος. Ergo, additâ digamma, et in fine factâ derivatione a sole, Regi imposuit nomen BELI.”—This last formation by the digamma, Vossius however rejects. Belus he says came from Βηλ, contracted from Βελ, from which Βελσαμην and other words. Voss. de Idol. Lib. II. cap. iv. tom. i. pp. 322, 323.—See the whole of that chapter of Vossius.

was to offer it ; and his only son was to be the victim : and, as I have shewn, that this could not relate to any thing prior, let us consider what is said upon the subject, as future, and attend to the consequence. For, if the sacrifice of the Phenicians was a type of another to come, the nature of this last will be known from the representation, by which it was prefigured. According to this, El, the supreme Deity, whose associates were the Elohim, was in process of time to have a son ; αγαπητον, well beloved ; μονογενη, his only begotten : who was to be conceived, as some render it* of grace, but according to my interpretation, of the fountain of light. He was to be called Jeoud,† whatever that name may relate to ; and

* “ I cannot help thinking that Anobret is the same as Ouranus ; and however it may have been by the Greeks differently constructed, and represented as the name of a woman, yet it is reducible to the same elements with Ouranus ; and is from the same radix, though differently modified. I take it to have been originally Ain Ober, the fountain of light, the word אור being rendered variously, Aur, Aver, Aber, Ober.”—Now Ouranus, Bryant had before derived in like manner, making it, the transposition of Ain Aur or Our, the fountain of light ; written Our ain, and thence by the Greeks Ouranos.—Bryant’s Observ. &c. pp. 295, 291.—Bochart however derives the word Anobret differently: thus, אנוברת, An-oberet, i. e. ex gratiâ concipiens : which, he says, is a just appellation for Sara, the wife of Abraham.—Boch. Phal. (Opera tom. i. p. 712.)

† The Hebrew word יהיד Jehid, signifies unicus, solitarius,

to be offered up as a sacrifice to his father, λυτρον, by way of satisfaction, and redemption, τιμωροῖς δαίμοσι, to atone for the sins of others, and avert the just vengeance of God; ἀντι τῆς παντῶν φθοράς, to prevent universal corruption, and at the same time general ruin. And, it is farther remarkable, he was to make this grand sacrifice, βασιλικῶ σχηματι κεκοσμημένος, invested with the emblems of royalty.—These surely are very strong expressions; and the whole is an aggregate of circumstances highly significant, which cannot be the result of chance. All that I have requested to be allowed me in the process of this recital, is this simple supposition, that this mystical sacrifice was a type of something to come. How truly it corresponds to that, which I imagine it alludes to, I submit to the reader's judgment. I think it must necessarily be esteemed a most wonderful piece of history."—Bryant's Observations on various parts of Ancient History, p. 286—292.

A most wonderful piece of history, undoubtedly, this must be confessed to be: and a most wonderful resemblance to the one great and final sacrifice is it thus made to present to the view. One impediment, however, in the way of a full and entire assent to the conclusion of the learned writer, arises from the consideration, that if we suppose this mystical sacrifice of the Phenicians, to have contained the typical allusion contended for, we must then admit, that among that most idolatrous and abandoned people, (as we learn from the Scripture history the people of Canaan or Phenicia were,) a more exact delineation of the great future sacrifice was handed down by tradition, than was at the same early age vouchsafed to the favoured nation of the Jews. The prophetic tradition, giving birth to the institution, had probably, Bryant observes, been preserved in the family of Esau, and so transmitted through his posterity to the people of Canaan. But was it not at least as likely that such a tradition would have been preserved in the family of Isaac, and so transmitted through his posterity to the people of the Jews? I am upon the whole therefore rather disposed to think, that this sacrifice of the Phenicians, grew out of the intended sacrifice of Isaac by Abraham, to which the circumstances of the history seem to correspond in many particulars.

and is frequently applied to an only son. It is the very word used of Isaac in Gen. xxii. 2.

First, it is remarkable, that the very name, by which God describes Isaac, when he issues his order to Abraham to offer him in sacrifice, is יְחִיד,* Jehid, agreeing with the Phenician name Jeud given to the son of Kronus. Again, if Anobret has been justly explained by Bochart, as signifying “ex gratiâ concipiens,” no epithet could be with greater propriety applied to Sara, the wife of Abraham; of whom the apostle says, “Through faith Sara received strength to conceive,—when she was past age.” Again, that Abraham should be spoken of by the Phenicians, as a king, who reigned in those parts, is not unlikely, considering his great possessions and rank* amongst the surrounding people: and if the name assigned by the history be actually Israel, or יִשְׂרָאֵל , as the abbreviation of Israel, little doubt can then remain as to its application, there being nothing unreasonable, (notwithstanding Vossius’s remark noticed in p. 383,) in supposing him called by the title of the famous Patriarch whose progenitor he was, and from whom a whole people took its name. If even we should suppose the true reading to be Il, as equivalent to the El of the Hebrews, and so consider him as ranked amongst the divinities of the Phenicians, as the other parts of the history undoubtedly describe Kronus to have been, there is nothing in this so very surprizing; especially when it is remembered, that Kronus is related to have been advanced from a mortal to the heavens. There is also an expression used of Abraham in Gen. xxiii. 6, which, by a slight variation of the rendering, would actually represent him as a supreme God, in perfect correspondence with all that we have seen applied to Kronus. The expression I allude to is נשיא אלהים , which is strictly rendered a prince of God, a known Hebraism for a MIGHTY prince, as it is accordingly given in the common bible, the literal English being placed in the margin. Now this might with equal accuracy, (אלהים being a plural word) be rendered, a prince of GODS, and would accordingly by those who held a plurality of Gods, as the Canaanites did, be so rendered: and thence he would come to be considered as supreme, or chief among the gods. And accordingly we find the Elohim, described as the associates of Kronus: $\text{Συμμαχοι Ιλα τε Κρονου Ελωειμ επεκληθησαν.}$ (Euseb. Præp. Evang. p. 37.) But yet farther, another circumstance remains to be noticed, which seems to give confirmation to the idea, that Abraham was the Kronus of Sanchoniatho. We are told of Kronus by this writer, (Præp. Ev. p. 38.) that he was the author of the rite of circumcision. $\text{Και τα αιδοια περιτεμενεται, ταυτο ποιησαι και τες αμ' αυτω συμμαχος καταναγκασας;}$ Etiam pudenda sibi ipse circumcidit, sociosque omnes ad simile factum per vim adigit. This exactly corresponds to what is said of Abraham, in Gen. xvii. 27.—See Stilling. Orig. Sacr. pp. 371, 372. Shuckford's Connexion, i. pp. 326, 327, and particularly Bochart Phaleg. tom. i. pp. 711, 712.

* "Take now thy son, (יְחִיד) thine only son." Gen. xxii. 2.

* See Gen. xxiii. 6. where Abraham is addressed as a king. “Thou art a mighty prince among us.”

Thus, upon the whole, it appears to me, that the reference of the mystical sacrifice of the Phenicians, to the intended sacrifice of Isaac by Abraham, is natural* and striking. Nor perhaps, after

* This application of the history of Sanchoniatho, (as reported by Eusebius,) to the circumstances of the birth and intended sacrifice of Isaac recorded by Moses, will appear yet more satisfactory to him who will take the trouble of consulting either Stillingfleet, or Bochart, on the whole of the Phenician Theogony, as derived from Sanchoniatho. Those writers abundantly prove, that the particulars of that Theogony are borrowed from the facts referred to in the Mosaic history, and its various fables founded upon the mistake or perversion of the language of the Hebrew records. —Stilling. Orig. Sacr. p. 368—372. Boch. Phal. Opera tom. i. p. 704—712. See also Banier's Myth. vol. i. p. 88—101, and Goguet's Origin of Laws, &c. vol. i. p. 370—384. President Kirwan likewise, in a learned paper On the Origin of Polytheism, &c. (in the xith. volume of the Trans. of the Royal Irish Acad.) has treated of this subject. Some of these writers indeed, particularly Goguet, have doubted whether Sanchoniatho was acquainted with the sacred books. But to the main point with which we are concerned, it seems to be of little consequence, whether the facts as they are reported by Moses, or the general tradition of those facts, formed the ground-work of the Phenician mythology.

It should be noted, that Bishop Cumberland, in his Sanchoniatho p. 134—150, maintains an opinion, directly repugnant to that which has been advanced in this Number, on the subject of the Phenician sacrifice. But it must be observed, that the learned Bishop's arguments are founded on the want of a perfect agreement between the particulars of Abraham's history, and those of Kronus as detailed by Sanchoniatho: whereas nothing more ought to be expected in all, do I, in holding this opinion, differ very substantially from the learned Mr. Bryant: inasmuch as that intended sacrifice is acknowledged to have been typical of a great sacrifice to come; and it may reasonably be supposed, that a tradi-

such a case, than that vague and general resemblance, which commonly obtains between truth and the fabulous representation of it. Of such resemblance, the features will be found, in the instance before us, to be marked with peculiar strength. But the fear of tracing the idolatrous practices of the Phenicians, especially that most horrid practice of human sacrifice, to the origin of a divine command, rendered this excellent prelate the less quick-sighted in discovering such similitude. Indeed, the professed object for which he entered upon his Review of Sanchoniatho's history, must in a great degree detract from the value of his researches upon that subject. The account given by his biographer and panegyrist Mr. Payne, states of him, that "he detested nothing so much as Popery, was affected with the apprehensions of it to the last degree, and was jealous almost to an excess of every thing that he suspected to favour it: that this depravation of Christianity ran much in this thoughts, and the enquiry how religion came at first to degenerate into idolatry, put him upon the searches that produced the work in question; inasmuch as the oldest account of idolatry he believed was to be found in Sanchoniatho's fragment; and as leading to the discovery of the original of Idolatry he accordingly made it the subject of his study." Preface to Cumb. Sanch. pp. x. xxviii. With a pre-conceived system, and a predominant terror, even the mind of Cumberland was not likely to pursue a steady and unbiassed course. The melancholy prospect of affairs in the reign of James the 2^d, his biographer remarks, had inspired him with extraordinary horrors.

tion* of its mystical nature would pass down through the branches of the Abrahamic family, and so by the line of Esau descend to the inhabitants of the land of Canaan. And thus eventually, the Phenician sacrifice, founded upon the typical sacrifice of Isaac, would derive from that, a relation to the great offering of which it was the model; and from its correspondence with the type, acquire that correspondence with the thing typified, for which Mr. Bryant contends, but in a form more direct.

Thus then in this mystical sacrifice of the Phenicians which, taken in all its parts, is cer-

* Were we to accept of Bishop Warburton's idea of the scenical nature of the intended sacrifice of Isaac, representing by action instead of words the future sacrifice of Christ, (whose day, as that writer urges, Abraham was by this enabled to see,) we might here positively pronounce, that a precise notion of that future sacrifice did actually exist in the time of Abraham: and that a foundation for the tradition was thus laid in an anticipated view of that great event. But without going so far as this ingenious writer would lead us, may it not fairly be presumed, that, in some manner or other, that patriarch, who enjoyed frequent communication with the deity, was favoured with the knowledge of the general import of this mysterious transaction, and that from him there passed to his immediate descendants the notion of a mysterious reference at least, if not of the exact nature, of its object. On this subject see Warb. Div. Leg. ii. p. 589—614; and Stebbing's Examination of Warburton, p. 137—149; and his History of Abraham.

tainly the most remarkable that history records amongst the heathen nations, we find, notwithstanding the numerous fictions and corruptions that disturb the resemblance, marked and obvious traces of a rite originating in the divine command, (as the intended sacrifice of Isaac indisputably was,) and terminating in that one grand and comprehensive offering, which was the primary object and the final consummation of the sacrificial institution.

NO. XLII.—ON THE DEATH OF CHRIST AS A TRUE PROPITIATORY SACRIFICE FOR THE SINS OF MANKIND.

PAGE 35. ^(t)—Not only are the sacrificial terms of the law applied to the death of Christ, as has been shewn in Numbers XXV, XXVI, XXVII, XXVIII, XXIX; but others, which open up more fully the true nature of atonement, are superadded in the description of that great sacrifice, as possessing in truth and reality, that expiatory virtue, which the sacrifices of the law but relatively enjoyed, and but imperfectly reflected. Reasonable as this seems, and arising out of the very nature of the case, yet has it not failed to furnish matter of cavil to disputatious criticism: the very want of those expressions, which in strictness could belong only to the true propitiatory sacrifice of Christ, being made a ground of objection against the propitiatory nature of the Mosaic atonement. Of this we have already seen an instance in page 356, with respect to the words* λυτρον, and αντιλυτρον. The expression, BEARING SIN, furnishes another: the author of the Scripture Account of Sacrifices, (p. 146.) urging the omission of this phrase in the case of the legal sacrifices, as an argument against the vicarious nature of the Levitical atonement.

Such arguments, however, only recoil upon the objectors, inasmuch as they supply a reluctant testimony, in favour of the received sense of these expressions, when applied to that sacrifice, to which they properly appertained. But from this these critics seem to entertain no apprehension: and their mode of reasoning is certainly a bold exercise of logic. From the want of such expressions, as being of vicarious import, they conclude against the vicarious nature of the Mosaic sacrifices: and, this point gained, they return, and triumphantly conclude against the vicarious import of these expressions, in that

* In addition to what has been already offered upon the meaning of these words, I beg to refer the reader to the judicious observations, in Mr. Nares's Remarks on the Version of the New Testament by the Unitarians, p. 125—130: and to those of Danzius, in his treatise De ΑΥΤΡΩ Μουσχ. Nov. Test. ex Talm. pp. 869, 870.

sacrifice to which they are applied. Not to disturb these acute reasoners in the enjoyment of their triumph, let us consider, whether the terms employed in describing the death of Christ as a propitiatory sacrifice, be sufficiently precise and significant, to remove all doubt with respect to its true nature and operation.

To enumerate the various passages of Scripture, in which the death of Christ is represented to have been a sacrifice, and the effect of this sacrifice to have been strictly propitiatory, must lead to a prolix detail, and is the less necessary in this place, as most of them are to be found occasionally noticed in the course of this enquiry; especially in p. 222, and Numbers XXV, XXVI, XXVII, XXVIII. There are some, however, which, as throwing a stronger light upon the nature and import of the Christian sacrifice, demand our most particular attention; and the more so, because from their decisive testimony in favour of the received doctrine of atonement, the utmost stretch of ingenuity has been exerted, to weaken their force, and divert their application. Of these, the most distinguished is the description of the sufferings and death of Christ, in the liiid. chapter of Isaiah. We there find this great personage represented as one, on whom the Lord hath laid the iniquity of us all; as one, who was numbered with transgressors, and bare the sins of many; as one, who consequently was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; and who, in making his soul an (זשא) offering for sin, suffered the chastisement of our peace, and healed us by his stripes. Thus we have here, a clear and full explanation, of the nature and efficacy of the sacrifice offered for us, by our blessed Redeemer. And as this part of Scripture, not only seems designed to disclose the whole scheme and essence of the christian atonement; but, from the frequent and familiar references made to it by the writers in the New Testament, appears to be recognized by them, as furnishing the true basis of its exposition; it becomes necessary to examine, with scrupulous attention, the exact force of the expressions, and the precise meaning of the Prophet. For this purpose, I shall begin with laying before the reader the last nine verses of the chapter, as they are rendered by Bishop Lowth in his admirable translation, with the readings of the ancient versions, and some occasional explanations by Vitringa, Dathe and other expositors.

4. Surely our infirmities he hath borne*:
 And our sorrows he hath ^acarried † them:
 Yet we thought him judicially stricken;
 Smitten of God and afflicted.

* נשא.

† סבל.

5. But he was wounded for our transgressions ;
Was smitten for our iniquities :
The ^b chastisement, by which our peace is effected, was laid upon him ;
And by his bruises we are healed.
6. We all of us like sheep have strayed :
We have turned aside, every one to his own way ;
And Jehovah hath made to light^c upon him
the iniquity of us all.
7. It was exacted,^d and he was made answerable ; and he opened not his mouth :
As a lamb that is led to the slaughter ;
And as a sheep before her shearers,
Is dumb : so he opened not his mouth.
8. By an oppressive judgment he was taken off ;
And his manner of life who would declare ?
For he was cut off from the land of the living ;
For ^ethe transgression of my people he was smitten to death.
9. And his grave, &c.
Although he had done no wrong,
Neither was there any guile in his mouth.
10. Yet it pleased Jehovah to crush him with affliction.
If his soul shall make a propitiatory sacrifice^f,
He shall see a seed, &c.

11. Of ^z the travail of his soul he shall see (the fruit,) and be satisfied.

By the knowledge of him shall my servant justify ^h many ;

For the punishment of their iniquities he shall ⁱ bear*.

12. Therefore will I distribute to him the many for his portion,

And the mighty people shall he share for his spoil :

Because he poured out his soul unto death ;

And was numbered with the transgressors :

And he ^k bare † the sin of many :

And made intercession for the transgressors.

^a (Carried) Bajulavit. Vitr.—Sustinet. Dath. and Doederl.—της πονης υπεμεινεν. Symm.—also Aq. and Theod.—See Crit. Sac. tom. iv. p. 5306.

^b (Chastisement.) Pœna exemplaris ad impetrandam nobis reconciliationem cum Deo. Vitr.—Ejus castigatio nostræ cum Deo reconciliationis causa facta est. Dath.——Mulcta correctionis nostræ ei imposita fuit. Tig.—מוסר, pœna publica ad deterrendos spectantes a peccando, exemplo pœnarum, ut Ezech. v. 15. Gusset. Lex. p. 332. Pœna exemplaris, quâ alius moneatur et cohibeatur a peccando. Παρα-

δεῖγμα. Cocc. Lex.—Michaelis (in loc.) likewise supplies many authorities, in support of the translation given by Lowth and Vitringa.—Castigatio salutis nostræ super ipsum, patet esse sensus verborum ex iis quæ sequuntur, וּבַחֲבֵרְתוֹ נִרְפָּא לָנוּ plaga sua curatio nobis fit, dum ille insons acerbissimos dolores sustinuit, nos sotes a peccatorum pœnis liberi manebamus, quasi Jehova ipsi nostrorum peccatorum pœnas luendas imposuerit. Rosenm.—N. B. the LXX version, παιδεία, which seems the principal ground of Mr. Dodson's objection to the Bishop's translation, supplies no argument against it, inasmuch as this expression is frequently used by the LXX, in the sense here contended for: see Levit. xxvi. 18. 23. 28. Deut. xi. 2. xxi. 18. xxii. 18. 1 Kings, xii. 11. 14. 2 Chr. x. 11. 14. Ps. vi. 1. xxxviii. 1. xxxix. 11. cxviii. 18. Prov. iii. 11. xiii. 24. xix. 18. xxii. 15. Isai. xxvi. 16. Jer. ii. 19. 30. v. 3. x. 24. xxx. 11. 14. xxxi. 18. xlvi. 28. Ezech. v. 15. xxiii. 48. Wisd. iii. 5. Hos. vii. 12. These passages, in which the words, παιδεία, and παιδεύω, are used by the LXX to express the Hebrew מוֹסֵר, and יָסַר, are all instances of their application in the sense of chastisement: to these there might be added many examples of the Greek word, used in this sense, from the book of Ecclesiasticus; and we find one passage in the book of Job, (xxxvii. 13.) in which the Greek translator has employed the word παιδεία, as expressive of the Hebrew מִשֵּׁב, a rod; so familiarly did they connect with it the notion of correction.—The word is also frequently used in this sense by the writers of the New Testament: see Schleusn. Lex. on παιδεία and παιδεύω.

^c (Made to light upon him the iniquity of us all.) Fecit incurrere in ipsum pœnam iniquitatis omnium nostrum. Vitr.—Jova ab eo exegit pœnam peccatorum nostrorum omnium. Dath.—Και κυριος παρεδωκεν αυτον ταις αμαρτιαις ημων, is the present reading of the LXX: and the Old Italic as given by Augustin, as well as the several readings collected by Sabatier, follow this very nearly; rendering it Dominus eum tradidit propter iniquitates nostras: but Symm. corresponds with the received reading, Κυριος κατανησαι εποιησεν εις αυτον την ανομιαν παντων ημων. The Syriac reads, Dominus fecit ut occurrerent in eum peccata nostra. The Vulgate, Dominus fecit occurrere in eum iniquitatem omnium nostrum: and Castellio, Jova in eum omnium nostrum crimen conjecit. Crellius, indeed, to avoid the force of this clause, translates it, Deum, per Christum, iniquitati omnium nostrum occurrisse: and is refuted by Outram, lib. ii. cap. v. § 3.—Rosenmuller renders the words, incursare in eum: jussit crimina nostrum omnium, h. e. pœnas impietati nostræ debitas illum unice perferre jussit Jehova. And upon the whole of the 4th, 5th, and 6th verses, he gives this general exposition:

Quem nos ob sua crimina atrocissimis malis a Deo affectum existimavimus, illum eos dolores sustinuisse nunc intelligimus, qui nobis pro peccatis subeundi fuerunt.

^d (It was exacted.) Exigebatur debitum. Vitr. ---Exactionem sustinuit, vel solutio exacta fuit. Michaelis.—Exigitur debitum, et ille ad diem respondit. Dath.—Mr. Dodson seems upon very slender grounds, to object to Bishop Lowth's translation of this clause. Dr. Taylor having, in his Concordance, pronounced the word $\psi\alpha\lambda\lambda\alpha$, to be a forensic term, signifying, he was brought forth, and Symmachus having rendered it by the word $\pi\rho\sigma\sigma\eta\nu\epsilon\chi\theta\eta$, appear but weak reasons for deciding this point: especially as the word $\pi\rho\sigma\sigma\eta\nu\epsilon\chi\theta\eta$ might have been used by Symm. in the sacrificial sense, in which it so frequently occurs: and that it was so in this instance, is highly probable from the rendering of the Fulgate; oblatus est, he was offered:—and though this does not come up to the Bishop's idea, yet still less does it favour that, which Mr. Dodson has adduced it to support.—For the numerous and weighty arguments, supporting the Bishop's translation of the word $\psi\alpha\lambda\lambda\alpha$, see Vitr. and Pole's Syn.—see also Calasio's Concord. where under Number II. not less than twenty-one passages are cited, which coincide with this application of the word. One authority more I shall only add: it is that of the Jews themselves, who allow that $\psi\alpha\lambda\lambda\alpha$ signifies, to demand rigorously what is due. Of this see a strong proof in the words of Kimchi, quoted in White's Comm. on Isai.

^e (For.) It is curious to observe the way, in which Mr. Dodson, who in his note on verse 11. charges the Bishop with "early prejudices and an undue attachment to established systems," has laboured to distort the obvious meaning of this passage, manifestly in support of a system, though not an established one. FOR the wickedness of my people, he would translate THROUGH the wickedness, &c. upon little better grounds than that it may be so translated: for as to the authority of the LXX rendering the preposition δ by $\alpha\pi\omicron$, which is his principal argument, it yields him no support; the word $\alpha\pi\omicron$ being frequently used in the sense of propter, as is satisfactorily shewn by Schleusner (Lex. Number 17.) who cites several instances to prove it, and amongst them Ex. vi. 9. Deut. vii. 7. Prov. xx. 4. Nah. iii. 11. evincing its agreement with the preposition δ in this respect: to the same purport see Bielius's Lexic. in LXX, on the word: and accordingly, $\alpha\pi\omicron$ is in this very place translated ob, by Procopius; (Crit. Sac. vol. iv. p. 5300.) and Sym. renders the words by $\Delta\text{ΙΑ}\tau\eta\nu\ \alpha\delta\iota\mu\iota\alpha\nu$. But that the word does in this place imply propter, the antecedent and impulsive cause, is not only fully proved by Vitringa, and Pole on verse 5. (see also Nold. Con- cord. p. 467.) but is even admitted by Crellius in his Answer to Grotius, p. 25. Nay, what is more, Mr. Dodson himself has in verse 5. allowed to the very same expression which occurs here, מַפְסָע, the signification which in this place he refuses to it, translating with the Bishop and the other Commentators, he was wounded for our transgressions. Perhaps prejudice and attachment to system may sometimes stray beyond the pale of the establishment: and tempting as those emoluments may appear, which an established church has to bestow, (Dods. Let. to Dr. Sturges, p. 24.) there may be passions, which influence the human breast, with a sway not less powerful than that of avarice. I say not this, from disrespect to Mr. Dodson, whose well meant, and in many respects ably executed, plan of reconciling the distinguished prophet of the old with the writers of the New Testament, deserves well of every friend of Christianity. But on most occasions, it may not be amiss to consider, whether prejudice may not lie at more than one side of a question, and whether he who is animated by an ardent spirit of opposition to established opinions, may not be influenced (though perhaps unconsciously) by other feelings than a love of truth.

^f On this clause see Number XXVII: and in addition to the observations there offered upon the passage, I would recommend to the learned reader the copious discussion of its structure and meaning by Danzius in his treatise De ΑΥΤΡΩ, Meusch. Nov. Test. ex Talm. p. 851—854.

^g (Of.) In this, the Bishop, as well as Mr. Dodson, and our present English version, departs from the uniformity of the preposition ἵνα, throughout this entire section. PROPTER laborem animæ suæ videbit. Vitr.—PROPTER has quæ peressus est afflictiones. Dath.—PROPTER labores ipsius. Rosenm.—So Crellius himself explains the word, in his Answer to Grotius, p. 25.—The LXX version of this book, which, (as has been already observed in p. 231, and is admitted also by Mr. Dodson, pref. p. vii.) is in many parts erroneous and even absurd; and from which, Vitringa remarks on verse 11, “but little aid is to be looked for in this book,” (see also the testimony of Zwinglius in Glass. Phil. Sac. continued by Bauer. p. 250.),—is here totally unintelligible: but the Vulgate renders the clause, PRO eo quod laboravit anima ejus: and the Doway, agreeably to this, translates; FOR THAT his soul has laboured, &c.—in which it has the advantage of the Protestant English versions.

^h (Justify.) Justitiam adferet multis. Vitr.—Justificationem conciliabit multis. Cocc.—Justitiam dabit multis: i. e. justificabit multos. Michael.—Justificabit ipse multos. Vulg.—Mr. Dodson indeed renders it, “turn many to righteousness;” and quotes the authority of Taylor’s

Concord. and Dan. xii. 3. He cites Grotius also, who on this occasion is the less to be attended to, as he most unaccountably applies the prophecy to Jeremiah, so as to render this sense of the word unavoidable. See Vitr. particularly on this word.—Cloppenb. asserts, that the most usual signification of the word הַצְדִּיק, as of the Greek δίκαιον, is to absolve, to acquit: see Pole's Syn. Justification, he says, is opposed to condemnation, and is a forensic term, signifying acquittal. Albert, on Rom. viii. 33, (Observ. Phil.) says of δίκαιον, it is a forensic term, implying a declaration of acquittal, of the person charged with any crime, and answers to the word הַצְדִּיק. Parkhurst in like manner explains it as being a forensic term, implying to absolve from past offences, and corresponding to הַצְדִּיק, for which he says, the LXX have used it in this sense, in Deut. xxv. 1. 1 Kin. viii. 32. 2 Chr. vi. 23. Isai. v. 23.—he might have added Exod. xxiii. 7. Ps. lxxxii. 3. Prov. xvii. 15. and many others which may be collected from Trommius and Calasio. The passage last referred to, places justification (הַצְדִּיק, δίκαιον,) in direct opposition to condemnation:—he that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are an abomination to the Lord.—Isai. l. 8. supplies a strong example of the same opposition. See also Schleusner on δίκαιον, which corresponding to צַדִּיק, is used, he says, “in a forensic sense: and signifies to be acquitted, to be pronounced innocent, and is put in opposition to καταδικαζέσθαι;" of which he furnishes several instances.

ⁱ (For the punishment of their iniquities he shall bear.) Siquidem eorum peccata bajulavit: Vitr.—Nam pro peccatis eorum satisfecit. Dath.—Nam pœnas eorum sustinuit. Doederl.—Et iniquitates eorum ipse portabit. Vulg.—Peccata illorum ipse sustinebit. Old Italic as given by August. Sabat. in loc.—Mr. Dodson contends against the propriety of the Bishop's translation; and maintains, that the words will bear no other meaning than, "their iniquities he shall bear away." In this he considers himself supported by the authority of the Seventy, who render, Και τας αμαρτιας αυτων αυτος ΑΝΟΙΣΕΙ. He does not however state, that Sym. translates the clause, τας ασεβειας αυτων αυτος ΥΠΕΝΕΓΚΕΙ: (Crit. Sac. tom. iv. p. 5300.)—and besides, as we shall see hereafter, the word αναφερω yields him no support. Bishop Stock renders, "Of their iniquities he shall bear the weight:" in which he agrees with Rosenmuller, who says, De formula hac bene monuit Martini, peccata propter mala, quæ sibi adjuncta habent, ab Orientalibus ut grave onus repræsentari, quo premantur, qui iis se inquinaverint, in cujus rei testimonium adducit locum Thren. v. 7. et ex Corano plura loca. Hinc apud Arabes, inquit, verbum, quod proprie est, grave onus sustinuit, dicitur pro, crimine gravatus fuit: itemque sarcina vocabulum solenne est de criminibus eorumque pœnis.

^k (He bare, &c.) Peccatum multorum tulit. Vitr.—Pro multorum peccatis satisfecit. Dath.—Multorum pœnas sustinuit. Doederl.—Peccata multorum tulit. Fulg.—Peccata multorum sustinuit. August.—pertulit. Cypr.—and both add, after the LXX, et propter iniquitates eorum traditus est: Sabat. in loc.—Mr. Dodson objects as in verse 11. and renders it, he took away the sins, &c.

I have thought it necessary, to take this accurate survey, of this celebrated prophecy; and to state thus fully, the various renderings of the most respectable versions, and commentators; lest any pretence might remain, that in deriving my arguments from this part of Scripture, I had either unguardedly, or uncandidly, built on any inaccuracy in our common English translation. The plain result of the whole is obviously this:—That the righteous servant of Jehovah, having no sin himself, was to submit to be treated as the vilest of sinners; and having the burden of our transgressions laid upon him, to suffer on account of them; and by offering up his life a propitiatory sacrifice, like to those under the law, to procure for us, a release from the punishment which was due to our offences. And thus, from that prophet, justly called Evangelical, who was the first commissioned to lift up the veil that covered the mystery of our redemption, and to draw it forth to open view from beneath the shade of Jewish ceremonies, and types, through which it had been hitherto but faintly discerned, we have a description of that great propitiatory sacrifice, whereby our salvation has been effected, as plain as it is possible for language to convey it. That Christ is the person described by the prophet throughout this chapter, cannot with any Christian be matter of question. St. Matthew, (viii. 17.) and St. Peter, (1 Ep. ii. 24.) directly recognize the prophecy as applied to Christ: and yet more decisive is the passage, in Acts viii. 35; in which, the eunuch reading this very chapter, and demanding of Philip, of whom speaketh the prophet this? it is said, that Philip began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

Indeed so evident and undeniable is the application to Christ, that Dr. Priestley himself, whilst he is laboriously employed, in withdrawing from the support of Christianity, most of the prophecies of the Old Testament, (which, he says, Christians, by "following too closely the writers of the New Testament," have been erroneously led to attribute to Christ, Theol. Rep. vol. v. p. 213.) yet pronounces it impossible to explain this of any other but Jesus Christ (p. 226.); and considers the application of it to Jeremiah by Grotius as not deserving a refutation. White also, who in his Commentary on Isaiah professes to follow Grotius as his oracle, is yet obliged to abandon him in his explication of this prophecy, which he says cannot possibly belong to any other than Christ: and this he thinks so evident, that he concurs with A. Lapede, in pronouncing, that “this chapter may justly challenge for its title, The Passion of Jesus Christ according to Isaiah.” See also Kennicott’s Dissert. vol. ii. p. 375.

But whilst Christ is of necessity allowed to be the subject of this prophecy; the propitiatory sacrifice, which he is here represented as offering for the sins of men, is utterly rejected. And for the purpose of doing away the force of the expressions, which so clearly convey this idea, the adversaries of the doctrine of atonement, have directed against this part of Scripture, their principal attacks. What has been already advanced in Number XXVII. may shew how impotent have been their attempts to prove, that Christ is not here described, as an זשן , or sacrifice for sin. And their endeavours to evince, that this sacrifice is not likewise described as one truly propitiatory, we shall find to be equally unsupported by just argument, or fair and rational criticism.

The usual method of proceeding has been, to single out one expression from this entire passage; and by undermining its signification, to shake the whole context into ruins. The person, who is made an \square W \square S, or sin-offering, is said to bear the sins of many. Now, it is contended, that to BEAR sins, signifies merely to bear them away, or remove them; and that, consequently, nothing more is meant here, than “the removing away from us our sins and iniquities by forgiveness.”* In support of this position, the application of the prophet’s words by St. Matthew, (viii. 17.) and the force of the expressions which in this prophecy are rendered by the words bearing sins, are urged as unanswerable arguments.

1. It is said, that “the words in the 4th verse, our infirmities he hath borne, and our sorrows, he hath carried them, are expressly interpreted by St. Matthew, of the miraculous cures performed by our Saviour on the sick: and as the taking our infirmities, and bearing our sicknesses, cannot mean the suffering those infirmities and sicknesses, but only the bearing them away, or removing them, so the bearing our iniquities is likewise to be understood, as removing them away from us by forgiveness.”

* B. Mord. p. 825. see also Taylor’s Key, No. 162. Mr. Dodson’s notes on this chapter of Isaiah—and particularly Crell. Resp. ad Grot. p. 24, &c.

It must be owned, that this passage of St. Matthew has given great difficulty to commentators. His applying, what the prophet seems to say of sins, to bodily infirmities; and the bearing of the former, to the curing of the latter; has created no small degree of perplexity. Some have, accordingly, contended,* that St. Matthew has applied the prophecy merely in accommodation; in which case, he supplies no authority as to the precise meaning of the words of the prophet: others† again, that the expressions admit that full and comprehensive signification, that will include both bodily and spiritual diseases, and which consequently received a twofold fulfilment: others‡ again, that Christ might be said to have suffered the diseases, which he removed; from the anxious care, and bodily harassing, with which he laboured to remedy them, bearing them as it were through sympathy and toil: and Bishop Pearce is so far dissatisfied with all of these expositions, that he is led to concede the probability, that the passage in Matthew is an interpolation. Now, if these several commentators, acquiescing in the received, have proceeded on an erroneous, acceptation of the passages, in Isaiah, and Matthew; we shall have little reason to wonder at the difficulties, which they have had to encounter in reconciling the prophet and the evangelist. It must surely then be worth our while to try, whether a closer examination of the original passages, will not enable us to effect this point.

* See Calixt. Ernest. Schol. Proph. p. 230.—Sykes Essay on Christ. Rel. p. 231.—Beausob. Rosenm. and Wakefield, in loc.

† See Hamm. Whitby, Le Clerc, and Lightfoot in loc.

‡ See Vitr. on Isai. liii. 4. and Raphel. Grot. and Doddridge, in locum.

For this purpose, it must first be observed, that all the commentators have gone upon the supposition, that the prophet, in the 4th verse, which is that quoted by St. Matthew, speaks only of the sufferings of Christ, on account of our sins: into which they have been led, partly by the Greek version, αμαρτιας; and partly by the supposition, that St. Peter refers to this same passage, when he speaks of Christ's bearing our sins upon the cross. But the reference of St. Peter is not to this 4th verse, but to the 11th and 12th: the words of St. Peter, τας αμαρτιας αυτος ανηνεγκεν, corresponding to the original in both these verses, and being the very same used by the LXX: τας αμαρτιας αυτος ανοισει, and αυτος αμαρτιας ανηνεγκε, being their translation of them respectively. Again, with regard to the word αμαρτιας, which is now found in the Greek version of the 4th verse, there seems little reason to doubt from what Dr. Kennicot has advanced, in his Diss. Gen. § 79. that this is a corruption, which has crept into the later copies of the Greek; the old

Italic, (as collected from Augustin, Tertullian, and Athanasius,) as well as St. Matthew, reading the word, ἀσθενειας, and thereby proving the early state of that version. Besides Dr. Owen, (Modes of Quot. p. 31.) mentions two MSS. that read at this day ἀσθενειας; and one μαλακιας: and from the collection in which the late Dr. Holmes was engaged, if happily it should be prosecuted, it is not unlikely that more may appear to justify this reading. I find also, that in 93 instances, in which the word here translated αμαρτια, or its kindred verb, is found in the Old Testament in any sense that is not entirely foreign from the passage before us, there occurs but this one in which the word is so rendered; it being, in all other cases, expressed by ασθενεια, μαλακια, or some word denoting bodily disease. See Calas. Conc. on ἡβη N^o. I. That the Jews themselves, considered this passage of Isai. as referring to bodily diseases, appears from Whitby, and Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. on Mat. viii. 17. and also Pole's Syn. on Isaiah liii. 4. Pes. and Alsch. And that the word ילל is to be taken in this sense, appears not only from the authority of the Jews, but from that of most of the ancient translations; being rendered by Munster and the Tigurine, infirmities; and morbos, by Tremellius, Piscator and Castalio.—Iren. and August. who give us the early Latin version from the Greek, read infirmities; and Tertullian, imbecillitates. Cocceius, and all the lexi-cons, explain it in the same sense; and the several passages, in which it occurs in the Old Testament, as collected both by Taylor and Calasio, place the matter beyond dispute. So that the word infirmities, by which Lowth, and Vitringa, in agreement with the old English versions, have rendered it in this place, cannot possibly be rejected. Mr. Dodson entirely concurs in this interpretation: and Kennicot asserts positively, that the word always denotes bodily diseases. (Diss. Gen. § 79.) Dathe, and Doederlein, indeed, explain it by the general expressions, mala, and miseriam; but Doederl. at the same time admits, that morbis is its literal signification.

Having thus ascertained the true sense of the word חָלִי, we next proceed to נָשָׂא; which, I agree with Mr. Dodson, is not here to be rendered in any other sense, than that of tollo, aufero. This, when not connected with SINS, INIQUITIES, &c. is not infrequently its signification. Dr. Kennicot (Diss. Gen. § 79.) takes it in this place in the sense of abstulit; and thus Tertulian expressly reads the word from the early Latin. So that the first clause, חָלִי הָיָה נָשָׂא, will then run, surely our infirmities he hath taken, i. e. taken away, exactly corresponding to St. Matthew's translation and application of the words: and thus Cocc. (on נָשָׂא N^o. I.) expressly renders it: "Morbos nostros ipse tulit, i. e. ferens abstulit."

But the second, or antithetical clause וּמִכְאֲבֵי מַכְאֲבֵי, relates, as we shall see, not to bodily pains and distempers, but to the diseases and torments of the mind. That the word מַכְאֲבֵי is to be taken in this sense, Kennicot affirms. (Diss. Gen. § 79.) It is evidently so interpreted, Ps. xxxii. 10. Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: and again, Ps. xxxviii. 17. where the Psalmist grieving for his sin, says, my sorrow is continually before me: and again, Ps. lxxix. 29. but I am poor and sorrowful: and again in Proverbs xiv. 13. the heart is sorrowful: and Eccles. i. 18. he that increaseth knowledge, increaseth sorrow: and ii. 18. what hath man of all his labour, of the vexation of his heart? For all his days are sorrows: and Isai. lxxv. 14. my servants shall sing for joy, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart: and Jerem. xxx. 15. thy sorrow is incurable, for the multitude of thine iniquity. Agreeably to this, the word is translated by Bishop Lowth, our common, and most of the early English versions, sorrows. The Vulg. Vit. and Dath. render it by dolores; and the LXX by ᾠδύναται.—Πονος, which is the word used by *Sym.

* Symmachus renders, τῆς πονος ὑπερμεσσην; as see page 400. It is observable, that the rendering of the word מַכְאֲבֵי, in this place, by ΠΟΝΟΣ, in the versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, has been omitted in Trommius's Concordance, in the Lexicon Græcum ad Hexapla, in Biel's Lexicon in LXX. &c. and in Schleusner's Spicilegium intended as an ad-

Aquil. and Theod. (see Procop. Crit. Sac. tom. iv. pp. 5199, 5300.) agrees with this, signifying, according to Hesychius, ἀλγος, ενεργημα αδυνας, and being used commonly in this sense in the Greek of the Old Testament. Yet, in opposition to all this, Mr. Dodson contends, that the Hebrew word is here to be rendered SICKNESSES: and this, upon no better ground, than that the word may signify bodily disorders, as well as diseases of the mind: and in support of this assertion, he refers to Taylor's Concordance. But on consulting both Taylor and Calasio, I find, that of about thirty passages of Scripture, in which, exclusive of the one at present before us, the word מַכְאֵב or its kindred verb is found, there is scarcely one, that bears any relation whatever to bodily disease*: and there is but one, (Job xxxiii. 19.) in which the LXX have rendered it, by any word implying corporeal ailment. In this one place, they have dition to the Lexicon of Biel. Trommius indeed notices this rendering of the word כָּאֵב by Symmachus in Job xvi. 6. and xxxiii. 19; and of the word מַכְאֵב by Aquila in Job xvi. 2. and by both Aquila and Symmachus in Ps. xiv. But none of these instances have been cited by Biel.—A complete Concordance for the fragments of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion seems still a desideratum.

* And what is singular, the very authority, to which Mr. Dodson refers, pronounces decisively against him in the passage before us, rendering the word by sorrows in this 4th verse as well as in the verse which precedes it. See Taylor's Concord. on מַכְאֵב Nos. 23, 25.

used the word μαλακκια, which however they do not always apply to bodily disease; and which they have employed in the 3d verse of this very chapter, ειδως φερεω μαλακκιαω, where Mr. Dodson renders the words, acquainted with GRIEF. But it is particularly worthy of remark, that this word מכאב, which Mr. Dodson in this 4th verse would translate sicknesses, he has himself rendered in the preceding verse, in the description to which this immediately refers, by the word, SORROWS, and yet pronounces this expression utterly inapplicable here: thus allowing the person spoken of, to be a man of sorrows, in one verse; and denying that the same expression, which was there used, referred to those sorrows, in the next where it came to be explained, what and whence these sorrows were.

The secret, however, of this inconsistency of criticism, lies in the Hebrew verb, annexed to this word.—The verb סבל, to bear, in the sense of bearing a burden, could not be applied to sicknesses, as it might to sorrows: and as the object with those, who deny that Christ suffered on our account, is to deprive the verb of this signification, the reason of contending for the adjunct sickness, in opposition to such a weight of evidence, is sufficiently obvious. The word, סבל, however, Mr. Dodson cannot prove to be taken here in the sense of removing. He says, “it has been already proved by many learned men,” and refers to Crellius, Whiston, and Taylor. But in what manner these learned men have proved it, we shall presently see. In his answer to Dr. Sturges, p. 21, he advances indeed his own reasons, in defence of his exposition of the word סבל: but, except the citation from Isai. xlvi. 4, which shall be noticed hereafter, his whole argument turns upon the supposition, that the Hebrew word with which it is connected, as well as its corresponding expression in St. Matthew, is to be understood as signifying bodily disorders: in which case, he says, “סבל must be considered as synonymous to נשא.” All this, then, together with the accompanying remark concerning the use of the word εβαρυσεν by Hippocrates, must fall with the hypothesis, on which it is built; and the strength of this hypothesis has been now sufficiently ascertained.

But, to proceed with the verb סבל.—The word, or its derivative noun, occurs in 26 passages of the Old Testament, one of which is the verse now under examination: two others relate to sins; one, the 11th verse of this chapter; the other, Lament. v. 7. both of which we shall hereafter discuss more particularly: and the remaining 23 belong literally to bearing burdens on the shoulder: and so strictly, and exclusively, is this signification appropriated to the word, that we find the bearers of burdens employed in the work of the temple, called (2 Chr. ii. 2. 18.

and our own English translation supported in the same sense by the most eminent biblical scholars, Vitr. Lowth. Dath. Doederl. and Rosenmuller; it is natural to enquire, what arguments have been used by those learned men, to whom Mr. Dodson refers us for his proof.

But the reader will be surprized to find, that confidently as Mr. Dodson has appealed to them, they furnish no proof at all. Mr. Whiston merely translates the passage as Mr. Dodson has done, without advancing a single reason in support of it: (see Boyle's Lectures, fol. ed. vol. ii. pp. 270. 281.) Dr. Taylor (Key, &c. § 162.) only says, that סבל will admit the sense of carrying off, or away; and in support of this, instances one solitary passage from Isai. xlvi. 4. which a single glance will prove not to convey this sense*. And as to Crellius, he even confesses, that he cannot find in the Old Testament, a single instance of the use of the word, סבל, in the sense of bearing away; and is obliged to

* It is particularly remarkable also, that Dr. Taylor, in his Concordance, has not only not adduced a single passage in which the sense of bearing otherwise than as a burden is conveyed; but he actually explains the word in this sense: —“to bear, or carry a burden, as a porter.” In the passage at present in dispute, indeed, he introduces the sense of bearing away: but then he does this avowedly on the supposition, that this passage is to be explained by the dis-eases spoken of by St. Matthew.

confine himself to the repetition of the argument of Socinus, derived from the application of this passage by St. Matthew to bodily diseases, which Christ could be said to bear, only in the sense of bearing away.* But, to suppose this clause applied by St. Matthew to bodily diseases, is a petitio principii: the sense, in which it was understood by the Evangelist, being part of the question in dispute. And that it was differently understood and applied by him, will, I trust, presently appear. Thus we find these learned men, to whom Mr. Dodson has referred for a complete proof of the point he wishes to establish, fulfilling his engagement in a manner not very satisfactory. Mr. Whiston offers no proof. Dr. Taylor gives a single, and inapplicable, instance. And Crellius begs the question, admitting at the same time the general language of Scripture to be against him. This may furnish a useful hint to unsuspecting readers.—But to proceed.

That this second clause in the 4th verse, relates not to Christ's removing the sicknesses, but to his actually bearing the sorrows of men, has, I trust, been sufficiently established. Let us now consider the corresponding clause in St. Matthew's quotation, τας νοσους εβασασεν. This has commonly been referred, it must be confessed, to bodily diseases; but, whether the occasion on which it is introduced, joined to the certainty that the preceding clause is applied in this sense, may not have influenced to this interpretation of the words, is worthy of enquiry. That the word νοσος is primarily applied to bodily diseases, there can be no question. Dr. Kennicot contends (Diss. Gen. § 79.) that it is used here to express diseases of the mind. In this he adopts the notion of Grot. on Matt. viii. 17: and certain passages both in the Old and New Testament, undoubtedly apply the word in this sense. Thus Ps. ciii. verse 3. who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy DISEASES. Wisd. xvii. 8. They that promised to drive away terrors and troubles from a SICK soul. Also 1 Tim. vi. 4. *He is proud, DOTING (or rather DISTRACTED, νοσων) about questions and strifes of words.* Schleusner also explains the word νοσεω, as metaphorically applied to the mind; and quotes in confirmation of this, Ælian, and Julius Pollux. To the same purpose, Elsner (Observ. Sac. tom. ii. p. 307.) appeals to Plutarch, Lucian, &c. And if νοσος, as all Lexicons agree, corresponds to the morbis of the Latins, there can be no question of its occasional application to the disorders of the mind.

* See Crell. Resp. ad Gr. p. 24: also Socin. De Jes. Chr. pars 2. cap. 4. Opera, tom. ii. p. 149.

Now, if the word be taken in this sense in this passage of Matthew, it will exactly agree with the sorrows, or sufferings, of Isaiah. Or if, supposing it to denote bodily disease, it be used by metonymy (as Vitringa, on Isai. liii. 4. explains it) for pains and afflictions, the cause being put for the effect; or if again, with Glasius, (Phil. sacr. Dath p. 972.) Doederlein, (on Isai. liii. 4.) and other distinguished biblical critics, it be supposed merely to express the punishment of sins, bodily diseases being viewed by the Jews familiarly in that light; or if, waving these interpretations, which some may consider as too strongly figurative, the word be taken in its largest sense, as comprehending ills and afflictions in general, without regarding what their cause might be,—it will equally correspond with the expression of the prophet.

And that it is to be taken in this large sense, and by no means to be confined to mere bodily disease, is yet farther confirmed by the emphatical verb βαρῶζεν, which is connected with it, and which so adequately conveys the force of the Hebrew, סבל. “In this word,” Grotius (on Mat. viii. 17.) remarks, “as in the Hebrew סבל, and its corresponding ܠܒܘܢ * which is here used by the Syriac version, is contained the force of burden and suffering.” Thus Mat. again, (xx. 12.) have

* On the force of the Syriac word ܠܒܘܢ consult Schaaf. Lexic. Syriac. So emphatical is this word, that the noun ܠܒܘܢ derived from it, is used to signify onus, pondus, sarcina, &c.

BORNE the burden and heat of the day. And Luke (xiv. 27.) Whosoever doth not BEAR his cross. John (xvi. 12.) But he cannot BEAR them now. Acts. (xv. 10.) A yoke on the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to BEAR. And in the same sense we find it used by St. Paul (Gal. vi. 2.) BEAR ye one another's BURDENS; also (v. 10.) He that troubleth you shall BEAR his judgment: and again (Rom. xv. 1.) We that are strong ought to BEAR the infirmities of the weak. It must be unnecessary to cite more passages. There are in all, 26 in the New Testament, in which the word $\epsilon\alpha\sigma\alpha\zeta\omega$ occurs, exclusive of this of Mat. viii. 17: and in no one, is the sense any other, than that of bearing, or lifting as a burden: (see Steph. Concord.) The 4 passages which are adduced by Taylor, (Key, 162.) viz. Mark xiv. 13. Luke vii. 14. Joh. xii. 6. and xx. 15, all of them imply this very idea: for even though the thing spoken of were eventually to be carried away, yet this necessarily requires that it should be carried or borne, as a burden. But what makes this objection the more extraordinary is, that the carrying away is not necessarily implied in any one of them: the carrying (bajulare, Vulg. and Tertull. and Cod. Brix.) the pitcher of water, which is spoken of in one; and the bearing the dead man's bier, that is referred to in another; conveying simply the idea of bearing. The two passages in John also, one relating to Judas bearing the bag, and the other to the taking away the body of Jesus, are by no means conclusive: the interpretation of carrying away, or stealing, what was put into the bag, though supported by B. Pearce and others, being but conjectural, and standing without any support from the Scripture use of the word: and lifting being all that is necessarily meant with respect to the body of Christ, although the consequence of that lifting was the carrying it away, and that our version attending to the general sense more than to the strict letter, has rendered it, borne him hence.

I will only remark in addition, that Dr. Taylor has contrived to exhibit a much more numerous array of texts, in support of his sense of the word εβασαζω, than those here examined. He has cited not fewer than ten. But this is a sort of deceptio visus; there being but the four above referred to in which the term occurs. The word εβασασεν he had joined with two others, ελαβε and ανηνεγκε, and pursued the investigation of them jointly: thus the text in which any of these words was contained, became necessary to be cited, and appeared to be applied to all. Whether this be an accurate mode of examining the signification of words, which may differ in meaning or force; or whether it may not tend to make a false impression on the hasty reader, by presenting to his view, a greater number of authorities, than really exist, in support of a particular acceptation, it would not be amiss for those who are used to talk largely about candour to consider. This digression, though it somewhat retards the course of the argument, I thought it right to make, as perhaps there is nothing more useful, than to put young readers on their guard against the arts of controversy.—To proceed.

The use of the word $\epsilon\alpha\varsigma\alpha\zeta\omega$ in the Old Testament, by the LXX, Sym. and Aq. confirms the acceptation here contended for, (see Trom.*

* It is to be observed, that it is not only the Concordance itself that is to be consulted, but more particularly, Montfaucon's Lexic. Græc. ad Hexapla, which Trommius has placed at the end of his Concordance, and which is to be esteemed as a most valuable collection from the fragments of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion. Of this Lexicon, as well as of the labours of Trommius, Biel has freely availed himself, in the compilation of his valuable Lexicon in LXX et alios Interp. &c. From these works it will be seen, that Aquila has employed the words $\epsilon\alpha\varsigma\alpha\gamma\mu\alpha$ and $\epsilon\alpha\varsigma\alpha\zeta\omega$, for the Hebrew סבל in Exod. i. 11. and for עמס in Zech. xii. 3:—and that Symmachus has applied it to the word סבל in Exod. i. 11. and Ps. lxxx. 7. Now these instances from Aquila and Symmachus are singularly important upon the present occasion, because the original word which they have thus rendered, is the word סבל , which I have already endeavoured to shew, unequivocally implies the bearing of a burden; and also because the version of the former is eminently distinguished by its literal agree-

Concord. and Biel.) Amongst profane writers also we find additional authorities. Albert (Observ. Phil. on Joh. xvi. 12.) supplies a strong instance from Epictetus. Raphelius likewise, (on John xx. 15.) although his mistake respecting the meaning of Mat. viii. 17. has led him to give the force of asportare to the word, adduces another equally strong from Polybius. In conformity with this acceptation also, we find Tremellius's and Schaaf's versions from the Syriac, and Beza's from the Greek, as well as the Vulg. and the Old Latin, render the word by portat; the plain and direct meaning of which is to bear as a burden. It may be likewise remarked, that Rosenmüller, although embarrassed with the notion that νοστος here implied bodily disease, is yet obliged by the force of the verb ἑσθάζω, to apply it in the above signification, notwithstanding it makes little less than nonsense of the passage: ONERI sanandi morbos nostros, HUMEROS SUPPOSUIT, is his explication of the words.

If the remarks which have been made be just, the result of the whole is, that the Prophet and the Evangelist entirely agree. They use the same language, and in the same sense: and ment with the original Hebrew (as see particularly Dath. Opusc. Dissert. in Aquil. p. 1—15.) The words סבל and ἑσθάζω thus appear exactly to correspond.—See also Stockius's Lexicon in Nov. Test. and Pasor's Greek Lexicon edited by Schoettgen.

the translation, which Bishop Lowth has given, will, with a slight variation, accurately convey the sense of both. Our infirmities he hath borne (away;) and our sorrows, he hath carried them: or as Dr. Kennicot translates both, Morbos nostros abstulit, et aegritudines nostros portavit. And this last is very nearly the version of the Old Latin, as given by Tertullian (see Sabatier on Is. liii. 4.) Imbecillitates nostras aufert, et languores nostros portat; or as Ambros. aegritudines nostras portavit: and it is accurately conveyed by the old version of Coverdale, which Dr. Kennicot (Diss. Gen. p. 45. note a.) does not scruple in many instances to prefer to our present English translation, *He only TAKETH AWAY our INFIRMITE, and BEARETH our PAIN. Thus are Isaiah and Matthew perfectly reconciled: the first clause in each, relating to DISEASES REMOVED; and the second, to SUFFERINGS ENDURED. For it should be remarked, in addition to what has been already said, that ελαβε and εβαλασε in Matthew, bear to each other the proportion of the verbs קָח and לָקַח in Isaiah: the former in each of these pairs being generic, πολυσημον, and extending to all modes of taking, or bearing, on, or away: and the latter being specific, and confined to the single mode of bearing, as a burden. And now by the same steps, by which the Prophet and the Evangelist have been reconciled, we find the original objection derived from St. Matthew's application of the prophecy completely removed: since we now see, that the bearing, applied by the Evangelist to bodily disease, is widely different from that which the Prophet has applied to sins; so that no conclusion can be drawn from the former use of the word, which shall be prejudicial to its commonly received sense in the latter relation.

* The late Principal Campbell has, I find, been led by a close examination of the subject to the translation of the Evangelist which has been here contended for: "He hath himself CARRIED OFF our INFIRMITIES, and BORNE our DISTRESSES." In his note on the passage, he falls, indeed, into the common mistake of supposing, that St. Peter and St. Matthew refer to the same part of the prophecy of Isaiah; remarking, that "we should rather call that the fulfilment of the prophecy, which is mentioned 1 Pet. iv. 21."—Campbell's Four Gospels, vol. iii. p. 66. and vol. iv. p. 74.

One point yet, however, demands explanation. It will be said, that by this exposition, the prophet is no longer supposed to confine himself to the view of our redemption by Christ's sufferings and death; but to take in also the consideration of his miraculous cures: and the evangelist, on the other hand, is represented as not attending merely to the cures performed by Christ, with which alone he was immediately concerned; but as introducing the mention of his suffering for our sins, with which his subject had no natural connexion.

Now to this I reply, first with regard to the prophet, that it is not surprising, that so distinguishing a character of the Messiah, as that of his healing all manner of diseases with a word; and one, which this prophet has elsewhere (xxxv. 5.) depicted so strongly that our Saviour repeats his very words, (Batt's Diss. 2d edit. p. 109.) and refers to them in proof that he was the Messiah; (Mat. xi. 4. and Beausobre in loc.)—it is not, I say, surprising, that this character of Christ should be described by the prophet. And that it should be introduced in this place, where the prophet's main object seems to be to unfold the plan of our redemption, and to represent the Messiah as suffering for the sins of men, will not appear in any degree unnatural, when it is considered, that the Jews familiarly connected the ideas of sin and disease; the latter being considered by them the temporal* punishment of the former. So that he, who was described, as averting, by what he was to suffer, the penal consequences of sin, would naturally be looked to, as removing, by what he was to perform, its temporal effects: and thus the mention of the one would reasonably connect with that of the other; the whole of the prophetic representation becoming, as Kennicot happily expresses it, “Descriptio Messiae benevolentissime et agentis et patientis” (Diss. Gen. § 79.)

* For abundant proof of this see Whitby on Mat. viii. 17, and particularly on ix. 2. See also Grot. Beausob. and Rosenm. on Mat. ix. 2. Drusius on the same, Crit. Sac. tom. vi. p. 288; and Doederl. on Isaiah liii. 4. Martini also on the same passage observes “Ipsa vero dicendi formula interpretanda est ex opinione constante tum populorum antiquiorum omnium, tum maximè Orientalium, quæ graviores calamitates quascunque, sive illæ morbis et corporis cruciatibus, sive aliis adversitatibus continerentur, immediate ad Deum, peccatorum vindicem referre, easque tanquam pœnas ab irato numine inflictas, considerare solebant.” See Rosenm. on Isaiah liii. 4.

That the Evangelist, on the other hand, though speaking more immediately of the removal of bodily diseases, should at the same time quote that member of the prophecy, which related to the more important part of Christ’s office, that of saving men from their sins, will appear equally reasonable, if it be recollected, that the sole object, in referring to the prophet concerning Jesus, was to prove him to be the Messiah; and that the distinguishing character of the Messiah was, to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins. (Luke i. 77.) So that the Evangelist may be considered, as holding this leading character primarily in view; and, at the same time that he marks to the Jews, the fulfilment of one part of the prophecy, by the healing of their bodily distempers, or as Dr. Taylor well expresses it, represents our Lord, as acting one part of his saving work described by the prophet, he directs their attention to that other greater object of our Saviour's mission, on which the prophet had principally enlarged; namely, the procuring forgiveness of their sins by his suffering. And thus, the present fulfilment of the prophecy was, at the same time, a designation of the person, and a pledge of the future more ample completion of the prediction. Grotius, notwithstanding he has fallen into the common error, respecting the word חלי in Isaiah, and the supposition that St. Peter and St. Matthew refer to the same part of the prophecy, deserves particularly to be consulted on this passage of Matthew. Cocceius also, in his Lexicon, (on the word סבל) gives this excellent explanation; "he hath taken on himself (susce- pit) our sorrows or sufferings, eventually to bear them away, as he has now testified by the carry- ing away our bodily distempers."

If it should be asked, why, if it were a princi- pal object with the Evangelist to point out the great character of the Messiah as suffering for sins, he did not proceed to cite those other parts of the prophecy, which are still more explicit on that head; I answer, that having to address him- self to those, who were perfectly conversant in the prophecies, he here, as elsewhere, contents himself, with referring to a prediction, with the particulars of which he supposes his readers to be familiarly acquainted; merely directing them to the person of whom it treats, and then leaving it to themselves, to carry on the parallel between the prophecy and the farther verification of it in Jesus. On St. Matthew's peculiar mode of citing the prophecies, see some excellent observations of Dr. Townson. Disc. iv. Sect. ii. § 5. and Sect. iv. § 3.

If, after all that has been said, any doubt should yet remain, as to the propriety of thus connecting together, either in the Prophet or the Evangelist, the healing of diseases and the forgiveness of sins, I would beg of the reader to attend particularly to the circumstance of their being connected together frequently by our Lord himself. Thus, he says to the sick of the palsy, when he healed him, thy sins be forgiven thee. (Mat. ix. 2.) And, that bodily diseases were not only deemed by the Jews, but were in reality, under the first dispensation, in many instances, the punishment of sin, we may fairly infer from John v. 14. where Jesus said to him whom he had made whole : Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee. It should be observed also, that what in Mark iv. 12. is expressed, and their sins should be forgiven them, is given in Mat. xiii. 15, and I should heal them. See also James v. 15. and Isaiah xxxiii. 24. and observe the maledictions against the transgressors of the law in Deut. xxviii. 21. See also, in addition to the authors named in p. 432, Grot. on Joh. v. 14.

Glass. Phil. Sac. a Dath. p. 972, and Le Clere, and particularly Pole's Syn. on Mat. ix. 2.

I have dwelt thus long upon this head, because there is no point, on which the adversaries, not only of the doctrine of atonement, but of that of the divine inspiration of the Evangelists, rely more triumphantly, than on the supposed disagreement between St. Matthew, and the prophet from whom he quotes in the passage before us. We come now to the SECOND head of objection; namely, that the words in the original, which are rendered by bearing sins, do not admit the signification of suffering for them: but are, both in this prophecy, and elsewhere throughout the Old Testament, understood in the sense of taking them away.

The two words, which are used by the prophet to express bearing sin, are as we have seen, p. 400, סבל in the 11th verse, and נשא in the 12th. Let us then enquire, in what sense these words are used, in other parts of the Old Testament. The word נשא, it is true, as we have already seen with respect to the 4th verse, is often applied in the signification of bearing away; but being (like the word bear in English, which has no less than 38 different acceptations in Johnson's Dict.) capable of various meanings, according to the nature of the subject with which it is connected; so we find it, when joined with the word sin, constantly used throughout Scripture, either in the sense of forgiving it, on the one hand; or of sustaining, either directly or in figure, the penal consequences of it, on the other. Of this latter sense, I find not less than 37 instances, exclusive of this chapter of Isaiah; in all of which, bearing the burden of sins, so as to be rendered liable to suffer on account of them, seems clearly and unequivocally expressed. In most cases, it implies punishment endured, or incurred: whilst in some few, it imports no more than a representation of that punishment, as in the case of the scape-goat, and in that of Ezechieh lying upon his side, and thereby bearing the iniquity, i. e. representing the punishment *due to the iniquity, of the house of Israel. But in no one of all this number, can it be said to admit the signification of carrying away, unless perhaps in the case of the scape-goat, Lev. xvi. 22. and in that of the priests, Ex. xxviii. 38. and Lev. x. 17: and of these no more can be alleged, than that they may be so interpreted. See on these at large, p. 440—449.

To these instances of the word נשא, connected with עון, חטא, sins, iniquities, &c. may fairly be added those, in which it stands combined with the words הרהור, בלמה, disgrace, reproach, shame, &c. of which there are 18 to be found: and in all of them, as before, the word is used in the sense of enduring, suffering. The idea therefore of a burden to be sustained is evidently contained in all these passages. Of the former sense of the word, when connected with sins, iniquities, offences, either expressed or understood, namely that of forgiving, there are 22; in all which cases, the nominative to the verb נָשַׁן is the person who was to grant forgiveness. To forgive then, on the part of him, who had the power so to do; and to sustain, on the part of him, who was deemed either actually or figuratively the offender, seem to exhaust the significations of the word נָשַׁן, when connected with sins, transgressions, and words of that import. In conformity with this induction, Schindler (Lex. Pentag. in נָשַׁן, N° III.) affirms, that this verb, when joined with the word sin, always signifies either to forgive it; or to bear it, i. e. to suffer for it: remittere, condonare; vel luere, dare pœnas.

* See Newcome, Munst. Vatabl. and Clarius on Ezech, iv. 4, 5.

Now it has been commonly taken for granted, and Socinus even assumes it as the foundation of his argument, (De Jes. Chr. pars 2. cap. 4.) that this signification of forgiveness, which evidently is not the radical meaning of the word, has been derived from the more general one of bearing away, removing. But this seems to have had no just foundation: bearing away, necessarily implying something of a burden to be carried, it seems difficult to reconcile such a phrase with the notion of that Being, to whom this act of forgiveness is attributed, throughout the Old Testament,

May not the word have passed to this acceptation, through its primary sense of bearing; namely, suffering through patience, enduring, or bearing WITH? And it is remarkable that Cocceius, at the same time that he complies with the general idea, of referring the signification of the word in the sense of forgiving sin to its acceptation of tolere, auferre, admits, that “in this phrase is contained the notion of bearing; ferendi, nempe per patientiam.” (Lexic. on נשא Number IX.) It is certain that the mercy of God is represented throughout Scripture, as being that of long suffering, and of great patience. See Ps. lxxxvi. 15. and particularly Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7. and Numb. xiv. 18. where this very character is joined with the word נשא, as that under which the Deity is represented as forgiving iniquity. And it is deserving of remark, that in the verse following the passage in Numbers, the forgiveness expressed by the word נשא, is described to be of that nature, that implies patient endurance, for it is said, as thou hast forgiven, נשאתה, this people, FROM EGYPT EVEN UNTIL NOW. Agreeably to this reasoning, Houbigant translates the word נשא, in both the last passages, parcere. Thus then, upon the whole, the generic signification of the word נשא, when applied to sins, seems to be that of bearing, suffering, enduring: and then on the part of the sinner, it implies, bearing the burden, or penal consequences of transgression: and on the part of him against whom the offence has been committed, bearing with, and patiently enduring it.

We are now enabled to form a judgment of the fairness of Dr. Taylor's criticism, (Key, No. 162.) on which Mr. Dodson, (Isai. liii. 4.) and all the writers, who oppose the doctrine of Christ's vicarious suffering, so confidently rely. We here see, that the language of Scripture furnishes no authority, for translating the word נשָׂא, when connected with iniquities, in the sense of bearing AWAY. Dr. Taylor, indeed, adduces instances of this use of the term, but they are almost all inapplicable to the present case; none of them relating to iniquities, except the three which have been already alluded to in p. 437, viz. Ex. xxviii. 38. Lev. x. 17. and xvi. 22. If then these three be found not to justify his explication, he is left without a single passage, of that great number, in which this word is used in reference to iniquities, to support his interpretation.

Now, as to the first of these, in which Aaron is said to bear the iniquity of the holy things; besides that the iniquity here spoken of, being a profanation of the holy things scarcely supplies an instance of נָשָׂא, in the direct sense of iniquity, combined with the verb; there seems no reason whatever to doubt that נשָׂא is here to be taken in its usual signification of bearing the blame of, being made answerable for, as in the passage in Numb. xviii. 1. which exactly corresponds to this, and as Houbigant here translates it, suscipiet maculas donorum. See Number XXXVII. pp. 335, 336: and in addition to the authorities there named, Munst. Vatabl. Clar. Fag. and Grot. on Numb. xviii. 1. It must be remarked also, that the word *εξαιρω, used in this passage by the LXX as equivalent to נשנ, furnishes no support to the objection: the term applied by the Seventy to express the same thing in the parallel passage in Numb. xviii. 1. being λαμβανω, which is the term commonly made use of by them to render נשנ, in those cases, where bearing the burden of sins by suffering for them, is understood. See on this p. 467.

The word נשנ, in the 2d passage, Lev. x. 17.

* If the use of the word εξαιρω by the Seventy, for the hebrew נשנ, supplied a proof that they understood the original word in the sense of bearing AWAY, then must they have understood Levit. ix. 22. in the sense of Aaron's bearing AWAY his hand, and Numb. xxiv. 2. in the sense of Balaam's bearing AWAY his eyes; for in both of these places have they rendered נשנ by εξαιρω. But this, it is clear, would make actual nonsense of those passages: the sense being manifestly that of lifting up in both. In this sense, indeed, it will be found upon examination, that the word εξαιρω has been applied by the LXX, in every case where it has been substituted for the hebrew נשנ throughout the Bible: the only places where it has been so used being these which follow.—Gen. xxix. 1. Ex. xxviii. 38. Lev. ix. 22. Numb. xxiv. 2. Jer. li. 9. Ezech. i. 19, 20, 21. iii. 14. x. 16. xx. 15. 23. Dan. ii. 35. Zech. v. 7.

has been pronounced, upon the authority of the LXX, which renders $\Gamma\omega\psi$ here by $\omega\alpha\ \alpha\phi\epsilon\lambda\eta\tau\epsilon$, to relate to the priests, and consequently to signify not bearing, but bearing away. But, even admitting the word in this place to be connected with the priests, and not with the victim, yet would it not thence necessarily follow, that the word could be used only in the sense of bearing away: it having appeared from what has been just said, that in its strict sense it might be applied with propriety even to the priests; and in this way we find it explained by Jun. and Trem. who thus expound it in this place; “ut a cœtu iniquitatem in vos transferatis et recipiatis expiandam;” and, at the same time, to denote the manner in which this bearing the sins of the congregation was understood, refer to Lev. xvi. 21, 22, in which the priest is described as personating the people, laying his hands on the head of the victim, and whilst he placed the sins of the people thereon, making confession in their name, and as their representative, so that he might be considered, as bearing their sins until he placed them upon the head of the goat. In like manner Patrick,—“the priest here, by eating of the sin-offering, receiving the guilt upon himself, may well be thought to prefigure one, who should be both priest and sacrifice for sin.” Houbigant translates, “quâ plebis iniquitatem *subeat*is;” and Stanhope (Boyle’s Lect. fol. vol. i. p. 779.) likewise explains it, by the priests "taking the sin upon themselves." Vatablus again, who also refers the word נשן to the priests, and yet does not explain it in the sense of bearing, that is sustaining, interprets it in the absolute signification of forgiveness, without hinting, that this was to be effected in the sense of bearing away: "that you should forgive," he says, "that is, declare the forgiveness of, &c." And indeed, it is remarkable, that the only passages, in which the LXX have rendered נשן when connected with sins, by the verb αφαιρω, are, besides the present one, these two, Ex. xxxiv. 7. and Numb. xiv. 18: in both of which God is represented as long suffering and forgiving iniquity, &c. and in which, what has been said in pp. 438, 439. may perhaps be sufficient to shew, that the sense of bearing away is not included. So that, were we to argue from analogy, the word αφελητε in this place, referred by the LXX to the priests, should be taken in the sense of forgiveness simply: in which sense* it is also used by the LXX in Ex. xxxiv. 9. where the original is נדו, condono. And thus, no argument arises in favour of the signification of bearing away.

But moreover the sense of the word αφαιρω, in the application of it by the LXX, is not to be concluded from its ordinary derivation. We find it, all through Levit. and Numb. especially in the 18th chapter of the latter, used to express the offering heave-offerings and wave-offerings to the Lord: and it seems remarkable, that in that chapter, special directions are given, that all such parts of the offerings as are to be waved and presented to the Lord, should be eaten by the priests; and with respect to these, the word αφαιρω is constantly used, and they are declared to be most holy (see Munst. Pag. Vatab. Clar. in Numb. xviii. 8.) These things certainly bear a strong resemblance to the particulars of the passage in Leviticus. But this I do not offer, as fixing the meaning of the LXX in this place. The word αμαρτιαν following the verb in the sense of iniquity, πγ, seems inconsistent with this application of the word αφαιρω here. It serves however to shew, that the use of the word, αφελητε by the LXX, is not decisive of their rendering the original in the sense of bearing away. And indeed, when the word ΑΠΟΦΕρω has been used by them as a translation of אָנָה, in a sense manifestly different from that of bearing away, (see pp. 468, 469.) the mere derivation of the word αφαιρω should not be deemed demonstrative of their applying it in that sense.

* It should be observed also that in Ps. xxxii. 6. where נשן is undoubtedly used in this sense of forgiveness, and is accordingly rendered by the LXX αφιημι, the word used by Symmachus is αφαιρω.

But besides, there seems no sufficient reason, for rendering the sentence so as to apply the expression to the priests, and not to the sin-offering. Commentators, indeed, seem generally to have assumed this point; and Crellius (tom. i. p. 20.), in his answer to Grotius, builds on it with perfect confidence. The system likewise of the author of the Scrip. Acc. of Sac. is in a great measure founded upon it. (pp. 123. 145.) But bating the authority of the LXX, there appears no ground whatever for this interpretation; and accordingly, not only does Grotius (De Satisfact. Chr. cap. i. § 10.) positively affirm, that this passage affords an instance of “the victim being said to bear the iniquity of the offerer,” but even Sykes himself, at the same time that he notices the version of the LXX, seems to admit the same. (Ess. on Sac. p. 144.) And I will venture to say, that whoever attends carefully to the original, will see good reason to concur in this interpretation. The passage exactly corresponds in structure with that in Lev. xvii. 11: and the comparison may throw light upon the subject. Here, the priests are rebuked for not having eaten the sin-offering, and the reason is assigned; for it is most holy, and God hath given it to you, to bear (לשאת, for the bearing,) the iniquity of the congregation, &c. There, the Jews are ordered not to eat blood, and the reason is assigned; for the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make atonement (לכפר, for the making atonement) for your souls, &c. Now, because the word you happens to lie nearest to the verb לכפר in this sentence, are we to infer, that the persons spoken to, were to make the atonement, and not the blood, which though it happens to be placed farthest from the verb, is yet the subject evidently carried through the whole sentence, and is immediately after pronounced to be that, which made the atonement? Yet this is the reasoning applied to the former passage, which is precisely parallel.

Indeed I cannot help thinking, that the whole of this passage in Lev. x. 17. has been hitherto misunderstood; and although, independent of the explanation which I am going to offer, the sense of the word bear which I contend for, seems already sufficiently established: yet since this is an interpretation, which appears generally to have been overlooked, I must beg to propose it here. Moses rebukes the sons of Aaron, because they had not eaten the sin-offering, as he had before commanded should be done, in the 6th chapter. Now, in that chapter he had directed, that the offering for the priests should not be eaten, but entirely consumed with fire, (verse 23.) but that the sin-offering for the people, should be eaten by the priests (verse 26.) In the 9th chapter we find Aaron, under the direction of Moses, presenting a sin-offering for himself, and another for the people; but, instead of obeying Moses's commands respecting the sin-offering for the people by eating it, he had burned it, as well as the sin-offering for himself. This is the occasion of Moses's displeasure, (x. 16.) and he reminds the sons of Aaron (verse 17.) that the goat being the sin-offering for the people, being appointed to bear the iniquity of the CONGREGATION, (not that of the priests,) it should therefore have been eaten. The force of the passage then is not, God hath given it YOU to (eat, that by so doing ye might) bear (away) the iniquity of the congregation, &c. but, God hath given you IT (to eat, it being the offering appointed to bear, or as is the strict translation) for the bearing (in whatever sense the sacrifice was usually conceived to bear) the iniquity of the CONGREGATION. This seems the most obvious and intelligible construction of this passage; and if this be admitted, it is evident, that this text furnishes no support to the opinions of those, who object to the sense of the word bear contended for in this Number.

As little support will the remaining text supply, which relates to the scape-goat, Lev. xvi. 22. That the scape-goat was represented as going into the wilderness, whilst he symbolically bore the sins of the people, which had been laid upon him, is certain; and that he consequently bore them away, is equally certain; but, that it thence follows, that the word used to express his bearing those sins, must of itself signify to bear away, seems an unwarrantable conclusion. Their being borne away, was a necessary consequence of the goat's going away; whilst the symbolical burden lay upon his head, and therefore proves nothing as to the meaning of the word here rendered to bear. Any word, which implied the sustaining a burden in any way, might have here been equally applied, unless it at the same time conveyed the notion of standing still under the burden, of which language (as far as I know) does not supply an instance. So that, in fact, the argument here seems to amount to this: that the word bear, leads the mind to bearing away, when the word AWAY is connected with it: — a position not necessary to combat.

It deserves also to be remarked, that the Seventy have not here used any of those terms, which might be supposed to countenance the sense of bearing away. Αναφέρω, αποφέρω, αφαιρέω, εξάιρω, which Dr. Taylor, and those who adopt his notions, are so desirous of bringing forward on other occasions, as proving the Septuagint interpretation of נשן in that sense, are all rejected by the LXX in this case; in which, if bearing away was intended, these, or some word, which might mark that meaning, would most naturally have been adopted: and the λαμβάνω, by which נשן is constantly rendered by the LXX in those cases where the actual sustaining of sins and their consequences is concerned, is the term employed.

We have now seen, what is the full amount of Dr. Taylor's objections against our account of the Scripture acceptance of the word נשן, when applied to sins. The three instances, whose value we have just considered, being all that he is able to oppose to a collection of 34 passages, which unequivocally apply the word נָשָׂא to the SUSTAINING of sin, or its consequences; together with 18 more, which, without exception combine the word in the same sense with the terms shame, reproach, &c. And it is curious to observe, that from a signification of the word, established upon such grounds, and in opposition to such evidence, it is, that he has deduced the force of the expression when applied to the forgiveness of iniquities; contending, that it derives this signification from its more general meaning of bearing away, previously ascertained in the way we have described.

Crellius, who is appealed to by Mr. Dodson on the signification of this word נָשָׂא, as he was before on that of סָבַל, (see pp. 420, 423.) adds but little strength to the cause. He mentions, indeed, an admission by Grotius, and an interpretation by Vatablus, but he refers us for the complete proof to Socinus, as Mr. Dodson had referred us to him. Socinus is to prove the point by examples, “pro-latis exemplis.” (Crell. Resp. ad Grot. p. 24.) Now, the examples adduced by Socinus, to prove that the word נָשָׂא, applied to sins, may properly be translated in the sense of bearing away, are the two, which have been already noticed in p. 439. viz. Ex. xxxiv. 7. and Numb. xiv. 18. And these, he says, clearly prove it, because here the word is applied in the sense of forgiving, and that was done by bearing away or removing sins, or their punishment. See Socin. Opera De Jes. Chr. pars. 2. cap. 4. pp. 148, 149. But, surely, since the dictum of this father of Socinianism was at last to decide the point, it had been sufficient had he at once affirmed it, without the circuitous form of an example.

Sykes, indeed, has discovered, as he thinks, one instance, which clearly establishes the acceptation of the word in the sense of bearing AWAY iniquity. It is that of Exod. x. 17. And I confess, were I confined to a single passage for the proof of the opposite, I think it is the one I would select, as marking most decidedly, that this word has not acquired the sense of forgiving, through the signification of bearing away. Pharaoh says unto Moses, FORGIVE (שָׁח) I pray thee my sin only this once, and intreat the Lord that he may TAKE AWAY (סָר) from me this death. Now, if the word שָׁח were rendered, with Dr. Sykes, take away, it must then be, take away the punishment of my sin; taking away the sin itself being unintelligible, and this being the very sense in which the word is said to acquire the force of forgiveness. See Socin. Opera, tom. 2. p. 149. But surely, to desire Moses to take away his punishment, and after that, to entreat the Lord that he would take away the same punishment, seem not perfectly consistent. Whereas, if we suppose the word expressing forgiveness, to convey the force of enduring, bearing with, all is perfectly natural: and Moses, having thus forgiven the sin of Pharaoh, might reasonably be called on to entreat, that the Lord would remit the punishment. Besides, it is observable, that where the punishment is spoken of, there the word used is not נָשָׂא, but הִסֵּד, which unequivocally signifies to take away.

What then is the result of this unavoidably prolix enquiry? That the word נָשָׂא, when connected with the word SINS, or INIQUITIES, is throughout the entire of the bible to be understood in one of these two significations: BEARING, i. e. sustaining, on the one hand; and FORGIVING, on the other: and that, in neither of these applications, does there seem any reason for interpreting it in the sense of bearing AWAY: nor has any one unequivocal instance of its use, in that sense, ever been adduced.

So far as to the word נָשָׂא. The meaning of נָשָׂא is, if possible, yet more evident. Being used, as we have already seen, pp. 420, 421. in every passage, where it is not connected with the word sins, or sorrows, in the literal sense of bearing a burden, we can have but little difficulty to discover its signification, where it is so connected. In its reference to sorrows, it has also been specially examined, and the result, as we have seen, has confirmed its general application. Its relation to sins is exemplified but in two passages, one of which occurs in the 11th verse of the chapter of Isai. under consideration, and the other is to be found in Lament. v. 7. Now it happens, that this last passage is such, that the meaning of the word cannot be misunderstood. Our fathers have sinned, and are not; and we have borne (סבלנו) their iniquities; or, as Dr. Blayney renders it, we have undergone the punishment of their iniquities. The force of the word סבל, then, will not admit of question: and if any additional strength were wanting to the argument concerning the verb נשא, this word סבל standing connected with iniquity in the 11th verse, exactly as נשא is with sin in the 12th, would abundantly supply it. That נשא indeed, in all cases where the sense of forgiveness is not admissible, has the force of סבל when used in relation to sins, will readily appear on examination. Their correspondence is particularly remarkable, in the parallel application of the two words in the passage of Lamentations just cited, and in those of Numb. xiv. 33. and Ezech. xviii. 19, 20, in which נשא is used to express the sons' bearing the wickedness of their fathers, in precisely the same sense, in which סבל is applied in the former.

These two words then, נשא and סבל, being clearly used in the common sense of bearing sins, in the 11th and 12th verses of this chapter of Isaiah, it remains yet to ascertain, what is the Scripture notion conveyed by that phrase. Now, this is evidently in all cases, the suffering, or being liable to suffer, some infliction on account of sin, which in the case of the offender himself, would properly be called punishment. This I take to be the universal meaning of the phrase. The familiar use of the words עון, חטא, iniquity, sin, for the punishment of iniquity*; or, as I would prefer to call it, the suffering due to iniquity; fully justifies this explication of the phrase: and so obtrusive is its force, that we find this meaning conceded to the expression even by Sykes, (Essay on Sac. p. 146.) Crellius, (Resp. ad Grot. p. 20.) and Socinus himself. (De Jes. Chr. pars ii. cap. 4.)

But, although the phrase of bearing sin is admitted by all to mean, bearing the punishment or consequences of sin, in the case where a man's own sin is spoken of, yet it is denied, that it admits that signification, where the sin of another is concerned: see Scrip. Acc. of Sacr. p. 142. Now in answer to this, it is sufficient to refer to the use of the expression in Lament. v. 7. compared with Jer. xxxi. 29, 30. and to the application of it also in Ezech. xviii. 19, 20.

* See 2 Kings vii. 9. and Zech. xiv. 19. and besides all the antient commentators, consult Bishop Lowth on Isai. xl. 2. Dr. Blayney on Jer. li. 6. and Primate Newcome on Hos. x. 13.—the last of whom subjoins the remark, that “this particular metonymy, of the cause for the effect, was natural among the Jews, whose law abounded with temporal sanctions, which God often inflicted.”

and in Numb. xiv. 33. In all of these, the sons are spoken of, as bearing the sins of their fathers; and in none can it be pretended, that they were to bear them in the sense of bearing them away, or in any other sense than in that of suffering for them: and the original term employed to express this, is עָבַר in the passage in Lamentations, and נָשָׂא in all the rest. Dr. Blayney translates the passage in Lamentations, Our fathers have sinned, but they are no more, and WE HAVE UNDERGONE THE PUNISHMENT OF THEIR INIQUITIES. Dathe renders the expression, both here, and in Ezechiel, by LUERE peccata; and at the same time affirms, (on Jer. xxxi. 29.) that the meaning of the proverb adduced both in Jeremiah and Ezechiel is, “that God punishes the sins of the fathers in the children.” The proverb, to which he alludes, is that of the fathers having eaten a sour grape, and the children’s teeth being set on edge. The time is approaching, Jeremiah says, in which this shall not be any longer, but every man shall DIE FOR HIS OWN INIQUITY. And this time, he subjoins, is to be under the new covenant, which was to be made with the Jewish people, and which was to differ from that which preceded, in that God was not, as hitherto, to visit the sins of the fathers upon the children, but to visit each individual for his own transgressions.

The same subject is more largely and explicitly treated by Ezechiel. The proverb used by Jeremiah is repeated by this prophet; and as Primate Newcome observes, is well rendered by the Chaldee. "The fathers have sinned, and the sons are smitten." This, he says, refers to the second commandment; and on the peculiar principles of the Jewish dispensation, he admits the reasonableness of it as a judicial infliction. Dr. Blayney, indeed, thinks otherwise, although he has expressly translated the passage in Lamentations, We have undergone the PUNISHMENT of their iniquities. This seems not consistent. Yet he peremptorily rejects the notion of this as a judicial infliction. Had Dr. Blayney however considered, that the penalties thus inflicted, were such as belonged to the old covenant, namely temporal, he would have seen no difficulty in this dispensation, as affecting the equity of God's proceedings; nor would he have been reduced to the inconsistency of calling that a punishment, in one place, which he contends cannot be a judicial infliction in another.

Let us follow the prophet a little farther:— he declares, as Jeremiah had done, that this shall no longer be. The judicial dispensation of the new covenant shall be of a different nature. In future, the soul that sinneth, IT shall die—if a man be just he shall live; but if he hath done abominations, HE shall surely die; his blood shall be upon HIM (upon his own head)—and yet ye say, why? DOETH NOT THE SON BEAR THE INIQUITY OF THE FATHER? The prophet replies; True, but this shall no longer be; when the son hath done judgment and justice he shall surely live. The soul that sinneth, IT shall die; the son shall not bear (נשא) the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear (נשא) the iniquity of the son. The passage from Numbers, in which the sons are said to bear (נשא) the abominations of their fathers, exactly accords* with those which we have now considered: and it appears incontestably from the whole, that to bear the sins of others,† is an expression familiarly used, to de-

* Hammond, on 1 Pet. ii. 24. supported by the Chaldee and Fagius, renders the passage here, bear the punishment of your sins:—see also Ainsworth, on Numb. xiv. 33.

† The observations of Martini on this subject deserve to be quoted. “Quicumque nimirum malis atque incommodis toleraudis aliorum miseriam avertit, eorumque salutem promovet, quâcunque demum ratione id fiat is pœnas peccatorum eorum luere, tanquam piaculum pro iis apud Deum intercedere dicitur, ut hominibus priscis fere omnibus, ita imprimis Hebræis. Eadem fere ratio est formulæ Arabibus frequentissimæ, redemptio tua sit anima mea, scil. apud Deum, h. e. acerba quævis, quin ipsius adeo mortis discrimen subire non recusarem, modo te juvare, liberationem a periculis, salutem atque incolumitatem tibi præstare possem. Ad explorationem vero ejusmodi formularum si pervenire velis, redeundum omnino est ad opinionem, ut veterum populorum omnium, ita imprimis Hebræorum, ex

note the suffering evils, inflicted on account of those sins.

I will not contend, that this should be called suffering the punishment of those sins, because the idea of punishment cannot be abstracted from that of guilt: and in this respect, I differ from many respectable authorities, and even from Dr. Blayney, who, as we have seen, uses the word punishment in his translation. But it is evident, that it is notwithstanding a judicial infliction; and it may perhaps be figuratively denominated punishment, if thereby be implied a reference to the actual transgressor, and be understood that suffering which was due to the offender himself; and which, if inflicted on him, would then take the name of punishment. In no other sense, can the suffering inflicted on one, on account of the transgressions of another, be called a punishment; and, in this light, the bearing the punishment of another's sins, is to be understood as bearing that, which in relation to the sins, and to the sinner, admits the name of punishment, but with respect to the individual on whom it is actually inflicted, abstractedly considered, can be viewed but in the light of suffering. Thus the expression may fairly be explained: it is however upon the whole to be wished, that the word, punishment, had not been used. The meaning is substantially the same without it; and the adoption of it has furnished the principal ground of cavil, to the adversaries of the doctrine of atonement, who affect to consider the word as applied in its strict signification, and consequently as implying the transfer of actual guilt. I could therefore wish, that such distinguished scholars, as Bishop Lowth, Primate Newcome, and Dr. Blayney, had not sanctioned the expression.

quâ calamitates quascunque, præsertim atrociores, tanquam pœnas peccatorum ab ipsis diis præsentibus inflictas considerare solebant, easque non aliâ ratione averti posse putabant, quam si victima innocens loco hominis ejusmodi pœnas subeundo, numinis infesti iram sedaret." — See Rosenm. on Isai. liii. 6.

That the term punishment, indeed, has frequently been used, where infliction only, without any reference to guilt in the individual sufferer, was intended, must be allowed. Cicero affords us a memorable instance of this; "Silent leges inter arma; nec se expectari jubent, cum ei qui expectare velit, ante injuncta pœna luenda sit, quam justa repetenda." The application of the word is yet more justifiable, where the sufferings endured have a relation to the guilt of another, on whom had they been inflicted, they would have received the name of punishment in its strictest sense. They are, to use an expression of Crellius, the materia pœnæ with respect to the offender; and when borne by another in his stead, that other may in a qualified sense be said to bear the punishment of the offender, as bearing that burden of suffering, which was due to him as the punishment of his offence. And thus in all cases, except where forgiveness is intended, the expression נשא עון, or סבל עון, is to be understood; namely, as sustaining, or bearing the burden of that MATERIA PŒNÆ, which was due to the offences, either of the individual who suffered, or of him, on whose account, and in whose place, he suffered. In this sense, we may justify the use of the expression bearing PUNISHMENT, in cases of a vicarious nature: but to avoid all cavil, and misrepresentation of the phrase, it were better perhaps, to adopt the phrase of suffering for sins.

This view of the subject, completely removes all those objections, derived from a rigorous acceptation of the nature of punishment, which have been urged by Socinus, and Crellius, and repeated by every dissenter from the received doctrine of atonement since their day. And it is curious to observe, that Dr. Benson, though contending for the notion of Christ's bearing our sins in the sense of bearing them away, and supporting this on the ground of Dr. Taylor's interpretation of נשא, סבל, and the corresponding Greek words in that sense, is yet obliged to admit the justness of the explication here proposed. "Sin, he says, is frequently, in Scripture, put for sufferings, or afflictions. Bearing iniquity, or sin, is likewise bearing punishment, or enduring affliction: and when that punishment, or affliction, was death; then bearing iniquity, or sin, and being put to death, were phrases of like import." And he admits, in consequence of this reasoning, that Christ's bearing our sins, or, as he thinks right to call it, "bearing them away, was by his suffering death; WHICH TO US, IS THE PENALTY OF SIN." (Benson on 1 Pet. ii. 24) So that we seem to have the authority of Dr. Benson for saying, that Christ bore our sins, by suffering the penalty due to them.

It has now, I trust, sufficiently appeared, that the expressions used in this chapter of Isaiah to denote bearing sins, are elsewhere in Scripture employed to signify, not bearing them away, in the indefinite sense of removing them, but sustaining them as a burden, by suffering their penal consequences: and this, not only where the individual was punished for his own sins, but where he suffered for the sins of others. We may now therefore proceed to enquire into the true meaning of the phrase, in the prophecy before us: and indeed so manifest is its application in this place, that were it even ambiguous in other parts of Scripture, this alone might suffice to determine its import: so that, but for the extraordinary efforts, that have been employed to perplex and pervert the obvious meaning of the words, it could not have been necessary to look beyond the passage itself, to ascertain their genuine signification to be that which has just been stated. In the description here given by the prophet, we are furnished with a clear and accurate definition of the words, and a full explanation of the nature of the thing. We are told, that God made the iniquities of us all to fall upon him, who is said to have borne the iniquities of many: thus is the bearing of our iniquities explained to be, the bearing them laid on as a burden; and though a reference is undoubtedly intended to the laying the iniquities of the Jewish people on the head of the scape-goat, which was done (as is urged by Socinus, Crellius, Taylor, and other writers who adopt their notions) that they might be borne, or carried, away; yet this does not prevent them from being borne as a burden. The great object in bearing our sins, was certainly to bear them away; but the manner in which they were borne, so as to be ultimately borne away by him who died for us, was by his enduring the afflictions and sufferings which were due to them; by his being numbered with the transgressors; treated as if he had been the actual transgressor; and made answerable for us, and consequently wounded for our transgressions, and smitten for our iniquities, in such manner, that our peace was effected by his chastisement, and we healed by his bruises; he having borne our iniquities, having suffered that which was the penalty due to them on our part, and having offered himself a sacrifice for sin on our account.

Now it deserves particularly to be remarked, that these strong and decided expressions, which are clearly explanatory of the manner in which our sins are to be borne, and borne away, are but little attended to by the Socinian expositors, whilst they endeavour by a detached examination of the words denoting the bearing of sins, and by directing our attention to the ceremony of the scape-goat, to exclude from the view those accompanying circumstances, which so plainly mark a vicarious suffering, and a strict propitiatory atonement. In contending, however, for the reference to the scape-goat in the expression bearing sins,* as it is here used, these writers furnish us with an additional argument, in proof of the scape goat having been a sin-offering, (see pp. 369. 396.): he, who was to bear our sins, and to procure our pardon, being here described expressly as a sacrifice for sin, דָּשָׁן. Some arguments, indeed, are offered by Socinus, (Opera, tom. ii. pp. 150, 151, 153.) and Crellius, (Resp. ad Gr. p. 23—30.) to weaken the force of the expressive passages of the prophet's description, above referred to. But, after what has been said, it is unnecessary to add to the length of this discussion, by a refutation, which must instantly present itself, on the principles already laid down.

* See Socin. Opera, tom. ii. p. 149. Crell. Resp. ad Gr. p. 21. and Taylor's Key, §. 162.

To bring, then, this tedious investigation to a conclusion, it appears: 1. That neither the expressions used by Isaiah in the 4th verse, nor the application made of them by St. Matthew, are in any degree inconsistent with the acceptation of the phrase bearing sins, here employed by the prophet, in the sense of sustaining, or undergoing the burden of them, by suffering for them: 2. That the use of the expression in other parts of the Old Testament, so far from opposing, justifies and confirms this acceptation: and, 3. That the minute description of the sufferings of Christ, their cause, and their effects, which here accompanies this phrase, not only establishes this interpretation, but fully unfolds the whole nature of the Christian atonement, by shewing, that Christ has suffered, in our place, what was due to our transgressions; and that by, and in virtue of his sufferings, our reconciliation with God has been effected.

I have gone thus extensively into the examination of this point, both because it has of late been the practice of those writers, who oppose the doctrine of atonement, to assume familiarly, and pro concesso, that the expression bearing sins signified in all cases, where personal punishment was not involved, nothing more than bearing them away, or removing them; and because this chapter of Isaiah contains the whole scheme and substance of the Christian atonement. Indeed so ample and comprehensive is the description here given, that the writers of the New Testament seem to have had it perpetually in view, insomuch that there is scarcely a passage in either the gospels, or epistles, relating to the sacrificial nature, and atoning virtue, of the death of Christ, that may not obviously be traced to this exemplar: so that in fortifying this part of Scripture, we establish the foundation of the entire system. It will, consequently, be the less necessary to enquire minutely into those texts, in the New Testament, which relate to the same subject. We cannot but recognize the features of the prophetic detail, and consequently apply the evidence of the prophet's explanation, when we are told, in the words of our Lord, that the son of man came to GIVE HIS LIFE A RANSOM FOR MANY, Matt. xx. 28: that, as St. Paul expresses it, he GAVE HIMSELF A RANSOM FOR ALL, 1 Tim. ii. 6: that he was OFFERED TO BEAR THE SINS OF MANY, Heb. ix. 28: that God made HIM to be SIN FOR US, WHO KNEW NO SIN, 2 Cor. v. 21: that Christ REDEEMED US from the curse of the law, BEING MADE A CURSE FOR US, Gal. iii. 13: that he SUFFERED FOR SINS, THE JUST FOR THE UNJUST, 1 Pet. iii. 18: that he DIED FOR THE UNGODLY, Rom. v. 6: that he GAVE HIMSELF

FOR US, Tit. ii. 14: that he DIED FOR OUR SINS, 1 Cor. xv. 3: and was DELIVERED FOR OUR OFFENCES, Rom. iv. 25: that he GAVE HIMSELF FOR US AN OFFERING AND A SACRIFICE TO GOD, Eph. v. 2: that we are RECONCILED TO GOD BY THE DEATH of his Son, v. 10: that his blood was shed FOR MANY, FOR THE REMISSION OF SINS, Matt. xxvi. 28.—These, and many others, directly refer us to the prophet; and seem but partial reflections of what he had before so fully placed before our view.

One passage, however, there is, which deserves a more particular attention; because, being an acknowledged translation of the most important part of the prophetic description, it has, jointly with the prophecy, experienced the severity of Socinian criticism. It is that passage in 1 Pet. ii. 24. where it is said of Christ, that he, his own self, BARE OUR SINS, in his own body, on the tree. This has been referred to the 4th verse of the liiid ch. but, as we have already seen (p. 414.), on grounds totally erroneous. With the same view, namely, that of weakening the force of the prophecy, the use of the word ἀνεγκειν by the apostle, to express the bearing sins, of the prophet, has been largely insisted on. The word ἀναφέρω, it is contended, is to be understood in the sense of bearing* away: and Dr. Benson, on 1 Pet. ii. 24.

* See Dodson on Isai. liii. 11. also Socin. De Jes. Chr. pars 2. cap. vi. & Crell. Resp. ad Gr. p. 21.

positively asserts, that the word αναφέρω is never used by the LXX, in any of those places, in the Old Testament, where bearing iniquity is taken in the sense of bearing punishment, or enduring affliction. Now, as St. Peter's words may fairly be considered, as a translation of the words of the prophet, or rather, as an adoption of the language of the LXX, (see p. 414) it becomes necessary to examine the force of the expressions here used, as being a strong authority respecting the true meaning of the original passage in the prophet. And in this examination we shall find abundant confirmation of the conclusion we have already arrived at.

The word αναφέρω, which strictly signifies to bear, or carry, up; and is therefore commonly applied in the sense of offering up a victim, as carrying it up to the altar; and may with equal propriety be applied to Christ bearing up with him, in his own body, τας αμαρτιας ημων επι ξυλον, our sins to the cross, (see Schleusn. Lex. and Hamm. in locum)—admits of course the signification of bearing as a burden; and joined with the word sins, as it is here, it corresponds to the Hebrew נשא, or סבל, in the sense of bearing their punishment, or sustaining the burden of suffering which they impose. In this very sense, the Seventy have used it, in direct opposition to Dr. Benson's assertion. For, in Numb. xiv. 33. where the sons are said to bear the whoredoms, or idolatrous sins, of their fathers, the word used by the LXX to express the Hebrew נשנ, is αναφερω: now the Chaldee, in this place, employs the word לבן, which is universally allowed to signify suscipere, to undergo, or sustain, (see Buxt. Lex.) and translates the whole passage thus, They shall bear your sins, and I will visit the iniquities of the fathers in the children. Munster, Vatablus, Fagius, and Clarius pronounce the expression to be a hebraism, for suffering the punishment of the father's sins. Houbigant expressly translates, pœnas luent. That this passage, also, is precisely of the same import with those in Lament. v. 7. and Ezech. xviii. 12, 20, where suffering for sins is expressly marked out, has been already noticed (p. 452—456.) Now, in these passages manifestly denoting the very same thing, bearing sins, in the same way and on the same account, the version of the LXX is υπεσχεν, in the former; and λαμβανω, in the latter. The force of υπεσχεν requires no confirmation: if it did, its application in Ps. lxxxix. 50. the only remaining place where it is used by the LXX, would supply it. And λαμβανω is the expression commonly applied by the LXX, throughout Leviticus, to express the bearing of sin, in those cases, in which the offender was to suffer the actual punishment of his transgressions. And in the very next verse, we find the word αναφερω applied to denote the bearing these very sins in the persons of the offenders themselves, which, they had been told in the preceding verse, their sons should likewise bear, ανοισσισι. So that these expressions, αναφερω, and λαμβανω, being employed by the LXX in passages precisely parallel, furnish a complete contradiction to Dr. Benson's assertion.

Indeed the Seventy seem to have used the compounds of φερω, without much attention to the force of the adjoined preposition. This is evident in their use of the word αποφερω, for the Hebrew נשן, in Lev. xx. 19. where the sin was not to be borne away, as the word would strictly imply, but to be borne by suffering the punishment of death: and likewise, in Ezech. xxxii. 30. where BEARING shame, is applied by the prophet in the same sense. And in this passage, whilst the Vatic. reads αποφερω, the Alex. reads λαμβανω; thus using the two words indifferently, although λαμβανω is employed by the LXX, almost universally, in cases implying the actual sustaining of guilt and suffering. Now, if even the word *ΑΠΟΦΕΡΩ has been used by the LXX. for נשן, in the simple sense of φερω, and in no other, throughout the bible; upon what ground is it to be argued, that ΑΝΑΦΕΡΩ cannot be used by them in the same sense; and particularly, when it is employed by them in the translation of the same Hebrew word, and similarly connected with the same subject, sins? But, to decide the acceptance of the word by the LXX, it will be sufficient to observe, that, of 133 passages of the Old Testament, in which, exclusive of those of Isaiah at present under consideration, it is used as a translation of the Hebrew, it never once occurs in the sense of bearing away: (see Trom. Concord.) and that in those places, in which it occurs in the relation of bearing sins, it is given as equivalent to the words נָשָׂא, and סָבַל; being employed to render the former in Numb. xiv. 33. and Isai. liii. 12; and the latter, ibid. liii. 11. And these three are the only passages in which the word is found so related.

* Biel, on the word αποφερω, remarks, that the Doric αποιση is expounded by Phavorinus κομιση, reportabis: thus it appears, that the force of the preposition is, in some cases, entirely lost in the compound: and, accordingly, the word sometimes signifies adduco.

Now, in addition to what has been already said, on the words translated bearing sins, in these passages, and especially, on the word סָבַל, let it be remarked, that the word ὑπενεγκεν, is used by Symm. for the ανοισσει of the LXX, in the last mentioned text: and that the very word, סָבַל, which in the 11th verse is translated, αναφερω, by the LXX, is, by the same, rendered in the 4th verse, in the sense of sustaining; the term employed by them being οδυναται, enduring grief, or affliction; as if they had said οδυνας, or πονος ΤΙΜΕΙΝΕΝ, which is the expression used by Aq. Symm. and Theod. in this which the phrase αμαρτιας αναφερειν is found; namely, Hebr. ix. 28. where it is said, that Christ was once OFFERED, to bear the sins of many.

The observations contained in this Number, will enable us to form a just estimate of Dr. Priestley's position; that neither in the Old Testament, nor in those parts of the New, where it might most naturally be expected, namely, in the discourses of our Lord and his apostles, as recorded in the gospels and acts, do we find any trace of the doctrine of atonement. On this Dr. Priestley observes, with no little confidence, in the Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 327—353. and again in his Hist. of Cor. vol. i. p. 158—164. Surely, in answer to such an assertion, nothing more can be necessary, than to recite the prophecy of Isaiah, which has just been examined, and in which it is manifest, that the whole scheme of the doctrine of atonement is minutely set forth: so manifest, indeed, that notwithstanding his assertion, Dr. Priestley is compelled to confess, (Th. Rep. vol. i. p. 530.) that “this prophecy seems to represent the death of Christ, in the light of a satisfaction for sin.”

But the emptiness of the position is not more clearly evinced by this, and other parts of the Old Testament which might be adduced, than by the language of our Saviour and his apostles, in those very parts of the New Testament, to which this writer chooses to confine his search, the gospels, and acts. For, when the angel declares to Joseph, that his name shall be called Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins, Mat. i. 21: when John, who was sent to announce the Messiah, and to prepare men for his reception, and from whom a sketch at least of our Saviour's character and the nature of his mission might be expected, proclaims him the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world; (Joh. i. 29.) thus directing the attention of his hearers to the notion of sacrifice and atonement (see Number XXXV): when we find St. John (xi. 50, 51, 52.) relating the saying of Caiaphas, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people, AND THAT THE WHOLE NATION PERISH NOT; and remarking on this, that Caiaphas had said this under a prophetic impulse, for that Jesus should die for that nation, AND NOT FOR THAT NATION ONLY, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God, that were scattered abroad: when we find our Lord himself declare, that he came to give his life a ransom for many, (Mat. xx. 28.) and again, at the last supper, an occasion which might be supposed to call for some explanation of the nature and benefits of the death which he was then about to suffer, using these remarkable words; This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins, (Mat. xxvi. 28.) which words Dr. Priestley himself admits (Theol. Rep. vol. i. pp. 345, 346.) to imply, “that the death of Christ in some respects resembles a sin-offering under the law”——when, I say, these passages are to be found, all referring, more or less directly, to the notion of atonement: when it is considered, also, that this notion of atonement was rendered perfectly familiar by the law; and when to these reflections it is added, that the prophecy of Isaiah, to which reference is made in some, possibly in all of these, had, by describing Christ as a sin-offering, already pointed out the connexion between the atonements of the law, and the death of Christ: there seems little foundation for the assertion, that nothing whatever appears in the gospels or acts, to justify the notion of atonement.

But admitting, for the sake of argument, that no instance to justify such a notion did occur, what is thence to be inferred? Are the many and clear declarations on this head, in the epistles of St. Paul, St. Peter, and St. John, to be pronounced surreptitious? Or, have these writers broached doctrines, for which they had no authority? Let Dr. Priestley take his choice. If he adopt neither part of the alternative, his argument goes for nothing.

But why, it may still be urged, are not the communications upon this subject, as frequent, and forcible in the gospels and acts, as in the epistles? Why did not our Lord himself unfold to his hearers, in its fullest extent, this great and important object of his mission?—Why, I ask in return, did he not, at his first coming, openly declare that he was the Messiah? Why did he not also fully unfold that other great doctrine, which it was a principal (or as Dr. Priestley will have it, Hist. of Cor. vol. i. p. 175. the sole) “object of his mission to ascertain and exemplify, namely, that of a resurrection and a future state?” The ignorance of the Jews at large, and even of the apostles themselves, on this head, is notorious, and is well enlarged upon by Mr. Veysie (Bampt. Lect. Sermon. p. 188—198.) There seems, then, at least, as much reason for our Lord’s rectifying their errors, and supplying them with specific instructions on this head, as there could be on the subject of atonement.

But besides, there appears a satisfactory reason, why the doctrine of atonement is not so fully explained, and so frequently insisted on, in the discourses of our Lord and his apostles, as in the epistles to the early converts. Until it was clearly established, that Jesus was the Messiah; and until, by his resurrection crowning all his miraculous acts, it was made manifest, that he who had been crucified by the Jews, was HE who was to save them and all mankind from their sins, it must have been premature and useless to explain, how this was to be effected. To gain assent to plain facts, was found a sufficient trial for the incredulity, and rooted prejudices, of the Jews, in the first instance. Even to his immediate followers our Lord declares, I have many things to say to you, but ye cannot bear them now: Joh. xvi. 12. And accordingly, both he, and they afterwards following his example, proceeded by first establishing the fact of his divine mission, before they insisted upon its end and design, which involved matters more difficult of apprehension and acceptance. Besides, it should be observed, that the discourses of our Lord and his apostles, were generally addressed to persons, to whom the ideas of atonement were familiar, whereas the epistles were directed to those who were not acquainted with the principles of the Mosaic atonement; excepting only that addressed to the Hebrews, in which, the writer solely endeavours to prove the death of Christ, to fall in with those notions of atonement, which were already familiar to the persons whom he addressed.

But Dr. Priestley is not content to confine himself to those parts of Scripture, where a full communication of the doctrine of atonement was least likely to be made. Having from long experience learnt the value of a confident assertion, he does not scruple to lay down a position yet bolder than the former; namely, "that in no part either of the Old or New Testament, do we ever find asserted, or explained, the principle on which the doctrine of atonement is founded: but that, on the contrary, it is a sentiment every where abounding, that repentance and a good life, are of themselves sufficient to recommend us to the favour of God." (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 263.) How little truth there is in the latter part of the assertion, has been already considered, in Numbers IX. and XVIII. That the former part is equally destitute of foundation, will require but little proof. The entire language of the epistles is a direct contradiction to it. The very prophecy, which has been the principal subject of this Number, overturns it. It is in vain, that Dr. Priestley endeavours to shelter this assertion under an extreme and exaggerated statement of what the principle of atonement is; namely, "that sin is of so heinous a nature, that God cannot pardon it without an adequate satisfaction being made to his justice."

It is an artifice not confined to Doctor Priestley, to propound the doctrine in these rigorous and overcharged terms; and, at the same time, to combat it in its more moderate and qualified acceptance: thus insensibly transferring to the latter, the sentiment of repugnance excited by the former. But, that God's displeasure against sin is such, that he has ordained, that the sinner shall not be admitted to reconciliation and favour, but in virtue of that great sacrifice, which has been offered for the sins of men, exemplifying the desert of guilt, and manifesting God's righteous abhorrence of those sins, which required so severe a condition of their forgiveness: that this, I say, is every where the language of Scripture, cannot possibly be denied. And it is to no purpose, that Dr. Priestley endeavours by a strained interpretation, to remove the evidence of a single text, when almost every sentence, that relates to the nature of our salvation, conveys the same ideas. That text, however, which Dr. Priestley has laboured to prove, in opposition to the author of Jesus Christ the Mediator, not to be auxiliary to the doctrine of atonement, I feel little hesitation in re-stating, as explanatory of its true nature and import. *Whom God had set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness, for the remission of past sins, through the forbearance of God: to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness, that he might be JUST, and (i. e. altho') the JUSTIFIER of him that believeth in Jesus, Rom. iii. 25, 26.

* I had, in the former editions of this work, adopted Primate Newcome's explanation of the word δικαιωσιν; conceiving the idea of justification, or method of justification, to be better calculated than that of righteousness, (the term employed by the common version,) to convey an adequate sense of the original. On perusing the observations of Mr. Nares, in his Remarks on the Unitarian Version of the New Testament, p. 150—153, I am now induced to alter my opinion: being fully satisfied, that that learned and ingenious writer has caught the true spirit of the original passage; and that the object of the inspired reasoner is not so much to shew, how, in the method adopted for the remission of sins, mercy was to be displayed, as how, notwithstanding this display of mercy, justice was to be maintained. In either view the sense undoubtedly terminates in the same point, the reconciling with each other the two attributes of mercy and justice; but the emphasis of the argument takes opposite directions; and that, in the view which Mr. Nares has preferred, it takes the right direction, must be manifest on considering, that, in the remission of sins, mercy is the quality that immediately presents itself, whilst justice might seem to be for the time superseded. On this principle of interpretation, the sentence will stand thus. Whom God had set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, for the manifestation of his JUSTICE (his just and righteous dealing) concerning the remission of past sins, through the forbearance of God: for the manifestation, at this time, of his JUSTICE, that he might be JUST, and (i. e. although) the JUSTIFIER of him that believeth in Jesus. The justice of the Deity, or his regard to what is righteous and just, is thus declared not to have been departed from in the scheme of redemption: this scheme bearing a twofold relation to sinners, in such a manner, that whilst it manifested the mercy of God, it should at the same time in no degree lay a ground for the impeachment of his justice. This view of the case will be found exactly to agree with what has been already advanced at p. 215. The reader, who will turn to the Annotations of Diodati, p. 117, will be pleased with the observations which he will there find upon this subject.

To argue here, as is done by Dr. Priestley and others, that the word δικαιος, cannot mean just with regard to punishment, will avail but

little in evading the force of this passage. Admitting even that it signifies, as Dr. Priestley contends, righteous, the argument remains much

Having been led by the discussion of this text to the mention of Mr. Nares's work, I cannot avoid expressing my regret, that the present edition has travelled thus far on its way to the public eye, without those aids, which an earlier appearance of that valuable performance would have secured to it. Being, like that respectable writer, engaged in the endeavour to vindicate the purity of Scripture truth from Unitarian misrepresentation, I am naturally desirous to avail myself of the exertions of so distinguished a fellow labourer. That these volumes, therefore, and the cause which they support, may not be altogether deprived of the advantages of such co-operation on the subjects which have been already displayed in the foregoing sheets, I shall here subjoin a reference to those parts of Mr. Nares's work which bear upon the same subjects, and bestow upon them additional enforcement and illustration. I beg then to direct the reader's attention to pp. 60—124. 173, 174. 181, 182. 217. 220, on the doctrine of the pre-existence treated of in Number I:—to pp. 126—130. 231—236. 154—164, on the ransom or price of redemption treated of in Number XXV, on the sense in which Christ is said to have been made a sacrifice for sin, and a sin-offering, as in Number XXVII. p. 234—242, and Number XXIX, and to have died for us, as in Number XXX:—to p. 144—154, on the meaning of propitiation, as treated of in Number XXVI, and of Atonement as in Number XXVIII: and lastly, to p. 131—140, on the meaning of the phrase bearing sins, which has been treated of in the present Number.

I have referred the reader to the discussion of these several subjects in Mr. Nares's work, not only because the view, which has been taken of them in the preceding Numbers, will the same; since, in this view, the reasoning of St. Paul goes to reconcile with the righteous dealings of God, which in respect of sin must be found thereby to receive ample confirmation; but, more especially, because the arguments employed by the learned author are shaped in such a manner, as to meet the Unitarian objections in that form, in which they have made their latest appearance, and which has been given to them by the joint labours and collective erudition of the party. In the year 1801, a challenge had been thrown out to the Unitarians, in the first edition of the present work, (see pp. 177, 178 of this edition,) calling upon them for an avowed translation of the Scriptures on their peculiar principles. Whether it has been in compliance with this demand, or not, that they have given to the world their Improved Version of the New Testament, is of little consequence. But it is of great consequence, that they have been brought to reduce their vague and fluctuating notions of what the New Testament contains, to some one determined form; and that they have afforded to the able author of the Remarks upon their version, an opportunity of exposing the futility of the criticisms, the fallaciousness of the reasonings, the unsoundness of the doctrines, and the shallowness of the information, which have combined to produce this elaborate specimen of Unitarian exposition. Spanheim has said, Controversiæ quæ cum hodiernis Socinianis, vel Anti-Trinitariis etiam extra familiam Socini, intercedunt, sive numero suo, sive controversorum capitum momento, sive adversariorum fuco et larvâ quadam pietatis, sive argutiarum nonnunquam subtilitate, sive Socinianæ luis contagio, in gravissimis merito censentur. (Select. De Relig. Controv. p. 132.) If this observation of Spanheim is admitted to be a just one, the friends of Christianity cannot surely be too thankful to the compilers of the Improved Version, for bringing together into one view the entire congeries of lead to punishment,—that forgiveness granted through Christ's propitiation, whereby the sinner was treated as if he had not offended, or was justified. This sense of the word just, namely, acting agreeably to what was right and equitable, cannot be objected to by Dr. Priestley, it being that which he himself adopts, in his violent application of the word, as relating to the Jews, compared with the Gentiles.

Doctor Doddridge deserves particularly to be consulted on this passage. See also Raphelius. The interpretation of δικαιος in the sense of merciful, adopted by Hammond, Taylor, Rosenmüller, and others, seems entirely arbitrary. Whitby says, that the word occurs above eighty times in the New Testament, and not once in that sense.

The single instance adduced in support of this interpretation, is itself destitute of support. It is that of Mat. i. 19.—Joseph, being a just man, and not willing to make Mary a public example, was minded to put her away privily. Now this means clearly, not, that Joseph being a merciful* their cavils on the New Testament; nor to the Remarker upon those cavils, for their complete and triumphant refutation.

* Campbell, although from his not discerning the adversative relation of the members of the verse, Mat. i. 19. he has not ascribed to the word the signification of just in this place, is yet obliged to confess that he has “not seen sufficient evidence for rendering it humane, or merciful :” Four Gospels, &c. vol. iv. pp. 6, 7.—The force of the Syriac word man, and therefore not willing, &c. but, that being a just man, that is, actuated by a sense of right and duty, he determined to put her away according to the law, in Deut. xxiv. 1: and yet, at the same time, not willing to make her a public example, he determined to do it privately. See Lightfoot, and Bishop Pearce, on this passage.

That the force of tamen, yet or nevertheless, which has been here ascribed to the word καί, is given to it both by the New Testament and profane writers, has been abundantly shewn by Raphel. tom. ii. p. 519. Palairer, pp. 41. 96. 221. 236. Elsner, tom. i. p. 293. and Krebsius p. 147.—see also Schleusner Lex. in Nov. Test. Numb. 11. and the observations at p. 215. of this volume.

which is here used for δικαιος, seems not to have been sufficiently attended to in the decision of this question: if the learned reader will take the trouble of examining the several passages in the Syriac New Testament, where the word ܕܝܟܝܘܨ, or its emphatic ܕܝܟܝܘܨܐ, occurs, he will be satisfied that in every case where it does not signify just in the most rigorous sense, it at least implies that which is founded in right. For its use in the former acceptation see Joh. v. 30. vii. 24. Rom. ii. 5. iii. 26. 2 Thess. i. 5. 2 Tim. iv. 8. Apoc. xix. 2.

NO. XLIII.—ON THE INCONSISTENCY OF THE REASONING WHEREBY THE DEATH OF CHRIST IS MAINTAINED TO HAVE BEEN BUT FIGURATIVELY A SACRIFICE.

PAGE 56. (v)—It has been well remarked, that there is great inconsistency in the arguments of some writers upon this subject. They represent the death of Christ, not as a proper, but merely as a figurative, sacrifice; and establish this by proving, that it cannot be either. For whilst they argue, that it is not a proper sacrifice, upon principles which tend to shew that no such sacrifice can exist, they prove at the same time that it is not a sacrifice figuratively, since every figure presupposes reality. The writers of the New Testament, who perpetually apply the sacrificial terms to the death of Christ, must surely have been under a strange mistake, since neither in a proper, nor in a figurative sense, did they admit of such application.

Upon the whole, the opposers of the proper sacrifice of Christ, on the ground of necessary inefficacy, are reduced to this alternative;—that no proper sacrifice for sin ever existed, and that consequently, in no sense whatever, not even in figure, is the death of Christ to be considered as a sacrifice;—or, that the efficacy which they deny to the sacrifice of Christ, belonged to the offering of a brute animal.

Besides, if they allow the sacrifices under the law to have been proper sacrifices, whilst that of Christ was only figurative: then, since the Apostle has declared the former to have been but types and shadows of the latter, it follows, that the proper and real sacrifices were but types and shadows of the improper and figurative.

On the pretence of figurative allusion, in the sacrificial terms of the New Testament, which has been, already, so much enlarged upon in several parts of this work, Dr. Laurence, in the discourse which he has lately published on The Metaphorical Character of the Apostolical Style, has thrown out some valuable ideas, which well deserve to be considered.

NO. XLIV.—ON THE NATURE OF THE SACRIFICE FOR SIN.

PAGE 36. (w)—I have not scrupled to adopt this definition, as it stands in the 2d. vol. of Theol. Rep. Numb. 1: to the judicious author of which paper I am indebted, for some valuable reflexions on this subject. On the true nature of the sacrifice for sin, see also Hallet's Discourses, 2d. vol. p. 293. Although both these writers, in adopting the premiat scheme of atonement, endeavour to establish a principle entirely different from that contended for in these discourses, yet are the observations of both upon the subject of atonement particularly worthy of attention.

NO. XLV.—ON THE EFFECT OF THE DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT IN PRODUCING SENTIMENTS FA-VOURABLE TO VIRTUE AND RELIGION.

PAGE 39. (x)—Doctor Priestley (Theol. Rep. vol. i. p. 419.) offers upon this head some very extraordinary remarks. He admits, that “the apprehensions of the divine justice, and of the evil and demerit of sin,” excited by the scheme of redemption here maintained, are “sentiments of powerful effect in promoting repentance and reformation.” But he adds, “that in proportion as any opinion raises our idea of the justice of God, it must sink our idea of the divine* mercy: and since a sense of the mercy of God, is at least as powerful an inducement to repentance, and as effi-

* Bishop Watson, in speaking of that arrogant and dogmatical theology, that decrees the rejection of the doctrine of atonement, as inconsistent with the divine attribute of mercy, uses the following just observations.—“We know assuredly that God delighteth not in blood; that he hath no cruelty, no vengeance, no malignity, no infirmity of any passion in his nature; but we do not know, whether the requisition of an atonement for transgression, may not be an emanation of his infinite mercy, rather than a demand of his infinite justice. We do not know, whether it may not be the very best means of preserving the innocence and happiness not only of us, but of all other free and intelligent beings. We do not know, whether the suffering of an innocent person, may not be productive of a degree of good, infinitely surpassing the evil of such sufferance; nor whether such a quantum of good could, by any other means, have been produced.”—Two Apologies, &c. pp. 466, 467.

cacious a motive to a holy life, especially with ingenuous minds, as the apprehension of his justice; what the doctrine of atonement gains on the one hand, it loses on the other.

Now does Dr. Priestley seriously think, that the abstract love of excellence, or the hope of distant reward, can produce upon the minds of men, impressions as powerful as the habitual fear of offending? That the desire of happiness acts upon us but through the medium of present inquietude; that we seek after it, only in the degree, in which we feel uneasy from the want of it: and that fear is in itself, however remote its object, an instant and perpetually acting stimulus, Dr. Priestley is too well acquainted with the nature of the human mind not to admit. And, I apprehend, he would consider that civil government but badly secured, which rested upon no other support than that of gratitude and the hope of reward, rejecting altogether the succour of judicial infliction. But besides, in comparing the effects, upon the human mind, of gratitude for the divine mercies, and fear of the divine justice, it is to be remembered, that one great advantage, which we ascribe to the latter, is this; that those humble feelings, which the apprehension of the great demerit of sin and of the punishment due to our offences must naturally excite, dispose us the more readily to place our whole reliance on God, and not presuming on our own exertions, to seek in all cases his sustaining aid. Farther, admitting that the bulk of mankind, (who, after all, and not merely ingenuous minds, are, as Doctor Priestley confesses, “the persons to be wrought upon,”) were as strongly influenced by love of the goodness of God, as by fear of his justice, it by no means follows, that “the doctrine of atonement must lose in one way what it gains in another:” because it is not true, that “the fear of the divine justice must sink our ideas of the divine mercy.” On the contrary, the greater the misery from which men have been released, the greater must be their gratitude to their deliverer. And thus, whilst the divine rectitude rendered it unavoidable, that the offender should be treated in a different manner from the obedient; the mercy which devised a method, whereby that rectitude should remain uninfringed and yet the offender forgiven, cannot but awaken the strongest feelings of gratitude and love.

Dr. Priestley however contends, that even the advantage ascribed to the doctrine of atonement, namely, that of exciting apprehensions of the divine justice and of the evil and demerit of sin, does not strictly belong to it; “for, that severity should work upon men, the offenders themselves should feel* it.” Now, this I cannot understand. It seems much the same as to say, that in order to feel the horror of falling down a precipice, on the edge of which he hangs, a man must be actually dashed down the steep. Will not the danger produce sensations of terror? And will not the person who snatches me from that danger, be viewed with gratitude as having rescued me from destruction? Or is it necessary, that I should not be saved, in order to know from what I have been saved? Can any thing impress us with a stronger sense of God's hatred to sin, of the severe punishment due to it, and of the danger to which we are consequently exposed if we comply not with his terms of forgiveness, than his appointing the sacrifice of his only begotten son, as the condition, on which alone he has thought it right to grant us forgiveness? Do we not in this see every thing to excite our fear? do we not see every thing to awaken our gratitude?

* The “ne non timere quidem sine aliquo timore possimus” of Tully, seems an idea quite inconceivable to Dr.

Priestley.—On this subject I beg to direct the reader's attention to the words of the late Bishop Porteus, and particularly to the striking and beautiful expression in the concluding clause, taken from Scott's Christian Life.—"By accepting the death of Christ instead of ours, by laying on him the iniquity of us all, God certainly gave us the most astonishing proof of his mercy: and yet, by accepting no less a sacrifice than that of his own son, he has, by this most expressive and tremendous act, signified to the whole world such extreme indignation at sin, as may well alarm, even while he saves us, and make us tremble at his severity, even while we are within the arms of his mercy." Porteus's Sermons, ii. p. 56.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

CORRECTIONS AND ADDITIONS.

IN VOL. I.

| | | | | | |
|------|-----|------|-------|----------------|----------------|
| Page | 10 | line | 30 | for VIII. | read VII. |
| — | 28 | — | 30 | — xliii. | — xlii. |
| — | 35 | — | 30 | — XII. | — XLII. |
| — | 46 | — | 30 | — XLIV. | — XLIII. |
| — | 148 | — | 7 | — 11 | — 12 |
| — | 150 | — | 19 | — 12 | — 13 |
| — | 154 | — | 9 | — 14 | — 15 |
| — | 190 | — | 24 | — Qui uti, nos | — Qui uti nos, |
| — | 230 | — | 9 | — Walton | — Wotton |
| — | 234 | — | 23-27 | — Mr. | — Dr. |
| — | 274 | — | 11 | — utility | — futility |
| — | 362 | — | 15 | — apostacy | — apostasy |
| — | 381 | — | 29 | — επιχρησια, | — επιχρησιαις |
| — | 418 | — | 2 | — 5199 | — 5299 |
| — | 430 | — | 29 | — iv. | — ii. |
| — | 467 | — | 14 | — 12 | — 19 |

Vol. I. page 115. At the end of the note add—That the reader may feel the full force of the observations contained in the above note, he is requested to peruse the extraordinary details, authenticated by Dr. Buchanan, in his recent publication, entitled Christian Researches in Asia; particularly those relating to the worship of Juggernaut, and the present condition of Ceylon, which are to be found at p. 129—147, and p. 182—190 of that work. These details must be alarming indeed to every serious mind.

Vol. I. page 162. To the note, what follows may be added—It may be satisfactory to the reader to know exactly, what are the Articles and Psalms that have been rejected by Mr. Wesley.—The Articles rejected are, the third, eighth, the greater part of the ninth, thirteenth, fifteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-third, twenty-sixth, much of the twenty-seventh, twenty-ninth, thirty-third, and three others of the less important ones at the end. Those marked in Italics are more particularly to be noticed. The Psalms rejected are, the 14th, 21st, 52d, 53d, 54th, 58th, 60th, 64th, 72d, 74th, 78th—83d, 87th, 88th, 94th, 101st, 105th, 106th, 108th—110th, 120th, 122d, 129th, 132d, 134th, 136th, 137th, 140th, 149th. The general character of the rejected Articles and Psalms will pretty clearly establish what has been alleged throughout Number XII. as to the nature of the opinions, which Mr. Wesley and his followers maintain, or at least of the doctrines which they reject.

The pamphlet published by Mr. Hare, in refutation of the charges against the Methodists contained in the former edition of this work, (a pamphlet which reflects credit upon its author for the ingenuity more than for the fairness with which he treats his subject,) reached my hands too late for a revision of its arguments at the time when I was preparing the above Number for the press. The new matter, however, which had been introduced into that Number, joined to the list now given of the rejected Articles and Psalms, and assisted by the avowals of opinion made by Mr. Hare himself on the part of those whose cause he espouses, may possibly be considered as superseding the necessity of a more specific reply. It is but fair to add, that certain inaccuracies, (that one especially of ascribing to Mr. Wesley what belonged to a letter of Mrs. E. Hutton,) I have corrected, although at the expense of cancelling two leaves: and I return Mr. Hare my thanks for enabling me to make the due corrections; although they certainly have not been suggested in that pure spirit of Christian meekness, which belongs to the character of Christian perfection, so familiarly claimed by him for his brethren of the Wesley connection.

